

Acknowledgments

I feel extremely grateful to all who believed in this project, even when it seemed it would never quite materialize. My gratitude goes to all the authors and to those contributors' estates which made it possible for all of us to appreciate the work of some of our most influential teachers who are prematurely departed. Heartfelt thanks are due to Barbara Banchero for her eloquent suggestions and knowing presence. Special thanks need to be conveyed to the three anonymous reviewers who selected the manuscripts for publication in a rigorously blind process, spent long hours poring over their contents, and rendered useful recommendations for revisions. I also feel appreciative of Annie Geissinger and A Moving Journal for prodding me along the way. Humble thanks go to my students who allowed me to freeze frame their authentic movement experiences.

There are not enough words to express my unwavering appreciation of my husband, D.A. Sonneborn, who not only stands tall at my side through thick and thin, but also has masterfully functioned as my personal head-descrambler, thought-clearer, sentences-corrector and deputy editor. This book would not be the same without your swift, elegant and tender touch, Atesh! I should also like to thank my son Jonas for challenging me often to deep and terse reflection. Praise needs also to be sung to the Edwards family, who pitched in at times of dire need.

Last but not least, my thanks are due to Jessica Kingsley and her staff for recognizing the importance of this offering.
