
Contents

Contributors	vii
Introduction GRAEME TURNER AND JINNA TAY	1
PART ONE
What is television?	7
1 Matrix media MICHAEL CURTIN	9
2 Less popular but more democratic? Corrie , Clarkson and the dancing Cru JOHN HARTLEY	20
3 The twenty-first-century telescreen MARK ANDREJEVIC	31
4 Screens: television's dispersed 'broadcast' P. DAVID MARSHALL	41
PART TWO
The function of post-broadcast television	51
5 Television and the nation: does this matter any more? GRAEME TURNER	54
6 Between the public and the private: television drama and global partnerships in the neo-network era SERRA TINIC	65
7 Approach with caution and proceed with care: campaigning for the US presidency 'after' TV TOBY MILLER	75

- 8 Reinventing television: the work of the 'innovation' unit 83
STUART CUNNINGHAM

PART THREE

Television and social change 93

- 9 Television culture with 'Chinese characteristics': the politics of compassion and education 96
WANNING SUN AND YUEZHI ZHAO
- 10 Television in Chinese geo-linguistic markets: deregulation, reregulation and market forces in the post-broadcast era 105
JINNA TAY
- 11 Television in the Balkans: the rise of commercial nationalism 115
ZALA VOLCIC
- 12 Anachronism, apologetics and Robin Hood: televisual nationhood
after TV 125
STEPHANIE HEMELRYK DONALD

PART FOUR

Television content: what's on now? 137

- 13 Latin America's impact on world television markets 141
JOHN SINCLAIR
- 14 Reasserting the national? Programme formats, international television and domestic culture 149
ALBERT MORAN
- 15 From monopoly to polyphony: India in the era of television 159
ADRIAN MABBOTT ATHIQUE
- 16 Fragmentation or consolidation? Factors in the Oprah-ization of social talk on multi-channel Arab TV 168
NAOMI SAKR
- 17 Globalizing televised culture: the case of China 178
ANTHONY Y.H. FUNG
- Bibliography* 189
Index 209