

Contents

Introduction	1
Community health workers: how they began	2
Linking the health sector and the community	4
Three major themes	8
Chapter 1. Attitudes	10
The vertical relationship: health personnel and CHWs	11
The vertical relationship: health personnel and communities	13
The vertical relationship: attitudes of communities towards health personnel and CHWs	14
Changing attitudes	15
Revising selection criteria	15
Revising curricula	16
Using a teamwork approach	16
Using student-oriented teaching methods	19
Involving health institutions	19
Increasing community participation	20
Improving supervision	21
Training institutions and health services set the example	21
Signs of change	23
Chapter 2. Structure and management	25
Village health committees: the formal link	28
Representation	30
Selecting health committee chairpersons and members	32
Using community structures	33
Involving community groups	33
Lessons learned	37
The community and the CHW	38
Involving traditional healers	40
Advantages of using traditional healers as CHWs	41
Constraints on using traditional healers as CHWs	44
Links between the health system and the health development structure	46
A call for action	48
Chapter 3. Resources	50
General concerns	51
Remuneration of CHWs	51
Support services	52
Planning and budgeting for CHW programmes	52

CONTENTS

Requirements for effective community involvement and contribution	53
Costs of CHWs	53
Assessing the costs of CHW programmes in Thailand and Jamaica	54
Financing mechanisms	62
Government support	62
Community support	63
Other private sector support	66
Resource allocation	66
Chapter 4. Conclusion: the way forward	68
References	70