

Bloomberg Businessweek

May 16 — May 22, 2016

Opening Remarks Why Larry Summers is taking on the Fed 12

Bloomberg View Venezuela's meddling military • Time for e-cigarette ads to butt out 16

Global Economics

Banks are blocking war-zone charities 18

Saudi Arabia's new energy minister plans to keep the oil flowing 20

Beijing confronts a looming debt disaster 20

Panama hates the Panama Papers, but it still has a bit of a thing for the shell company business 22

Companies/Industries

The Takata recall just doubled in size. Getting your replacement air bag may take years 27

Brazilian businesses crave resolution on the ouster of Dilma Rousseff 28

Germany develops a case of Tesla-phobia 29

Charges of intellectual-property theft blossom—in the flower biz 30

Briefs: Amazon takes aim at YouTube; Staples backs away from its $6.3 billion bid for Office Depot 32

Politics/Policy

If international trade caused your layoff and you're lucky, there's help 35

Will Silicon Valley heavyweights line up behind Hillary? 36

The UAW is determined to get into an Ivy League school 37

Revenge of the panhandlers 38

Technology

Apple prepares for a second stab at streaming music 41

It looks like the decade-long smartphone party is over 42

Phones that unlock with a fingerprint let cops do an end run around encryption 43

Accountants at Facebook and Amazon factor in all those employee stock grants 44

Innovation: Inflatable expansion modules for the International Space Station 45

Markets/Personal Finance

Bond yields are low, stock valuations are high, and nest eggs aren't going to go as far 47

Assisted living in Manhattan, for those who can swing $20,000 a month 48

The right to sue your bank may soon be restored 49

When couples divorce, they can split the house, but what about the labradoodle? 50

Charlie Rose talks to fine art auctioneer Simon de Pury 54

Focus On/Mid-Market

What's light, crunchy, and saw its sales quadruple in the last two years? SkinnyPop 57

Business Talent Group brings consultant fees down to size 58

Vroom refurbishes and guarantees the cars for sale on its site 59

Features

Hawaiian Punch-Up Millionaires are suing billionaires over beach chairs on the Big Island 62

There's an Oil Bust? Pioneer is doggedly drilling new wells in West Texas 68

Guns for Hire How Uganda became the world leader in mercenaries 72

Etc.

Are cognitive enhancers the new breakfast of champions? 79

Design: Seventies-inspired office furniture is very of-the-moment 82

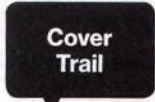

Technology: One reporter, one week of living by Google's auto e-mail generator 83

Beauty: The best products for your face this summer 84

The Critic: Money Monster picks up where The Wolf of Wall Street and The Big Short left off 86

What I Wear to Work: Sandra Reshef pared down to 125 pairs of shoes, but she's still the Queen of Clearance 87

How Did I Get Here? Restaurateur and head Top Chef judge Tom Colicchio didn't last long as an ice cream scooper 88

How the cover gets made

Domestic Cover

"Cover is on our current economic state. Janet Yellen is quietly optimistic that we're bouncing back. Larry Summers thinks we're on a path to catastrophe."

"Who's right?"

"There's no way to predict the future, but the story points to some concrete examples that back Larry's point of view."

"Has he made an effort to warn us?"

"He's a vocal critic. And he's constantly making his argument on social media and at conferences around the world."

"And he also got passed up for her job, right?"

"Yes."

"I see what's happening here."

Larry Summers has something to say: The economy is really sick. Is he right? By [unclear]

International Cover

"I think a photo of the U.S. Federal Reserve chair and the man who almost got her job might not be a big draw for people outside the U.S."

"Strongly disagree."

"How many foreign central bankers can you identify?"

"I feel like you asked me that expecting that I wouldn't know any, and rather than play your sick game, I'm going to retain my dignity by silently walking away and designing another cover."

DOMESTIC COVER AND COVER TRAIL: SUMMERS, ANDREW HARRBERG/BLOOMBERG; YELLEN, COURTESY FEDERAL RESERVE