

How the cover gets made

|  |    |
|--|----|
| Opening Remarks China's heavy hand in Hong Kong sparks an independence movement   | 10 |
| Bloomberg View Stimulus is no longer a dirty word • Immigration reform can't wait                                       | 12 |
| Movers ▲ Univision buys the bankrupt Gawker Media ▼ French beaches ban the burkini                                      | 15 |
| Global Economics  |    |
| Erdogan is probably coup-proof   | 16 |
| Tensions with most of its neighbors are rising, but China has an ally in Singapore   | 17 |
| With government spending slashed, Saudi companies aren't paying foreign workers—or even sending them home                      | 18 |
| Brexit: Very little guidance for what promises to be a very messy divorce  | 20 |
| Companies/Industries  |    |
| Robo-Uber gets ready to ride in Pittsburgh   | 22 |
| At Aldi, where thrift is a religion, a free-spending heiress causes a row  | 24 |
| The CrossFit generation's idea of a wild night: Spiked sparkling seltzer   | 25 |
| Politics/Policy   |    |
| Will a new captain right Trump's ship?   | 26 |
| UnitedHealth, Aetna, and Humana give the insurance market an Obamascare  | 27 |
| Utility customers are paying for nuclear power they may never get  | 29 |
| Technology  |    |
| StockX found sneakerhead heaven. Can it resell Ferraris?   | 30 |
| With the digital Latch, you finally have a doorman—and your landlord has a spy   | 31 |
| Turns out you probably can't patent that amazing abstract business concept   | 32 |
| Apple's iPhone must be feeling Blu   | 33 |
| Innovation: Outset Medical's DIY dialysis  | 34 |
| Markets/Finance   |    |
| How some top Silicon Valley dealmakers win M&A and enemies   | 36 |
| The Big Short gets a sequel: The Small Fee   | 37 |
| For overseas investors, U.S. Treasuries yield their yield advantage  | 38 |
| Northwestern's endowment is pumped up on one extremely lucrative drug  | 39 |
| Features  |    |
| Crime Magnet Why police officers spend their entire shifts at Walmart   | 40 |
| Disruption Lending Club promised to shake up the online-loan market. Did it ever  | 46 |
| Pray for Permits What it's taking to build a mosque in New Hampshire  | 52 |
| Etc.  |    |
| Co-working spaces ditch the one-desk-fits-all approach for rock climbing and cocktails   | 59 |
| Innovation: Now that you can rent everything from chickens to falcons, the sharing economy has run wild                        | 62 |
| Weddings: What the hell does "festive" attire mean?  | 64 |
| Drinks: The bittersweet Garibaldi has only two ingredients, confirming that less is more                                       | 65 |
| The Critic: A history of Argentina, from Maradona to Messi   | 66 |
| What I Wear to Work: Designer Andrea Wagner isn't one of those "black-turtleneck people." Just look at her hair                | 67 |
| How Did I Get Here? Mark Burnett, producer of The Apprentice and a new Ben-Hur , started out jumping from planes | 68 |

1

"The cover story is on Walmart. It's seen crime spike since it cut back on store employees, and the responsibility for security has been transferred to local police."

"So taxpayers are basically paying for safety at Walmart? But people are still getting hurt, because no one is trying to prevent crimes from happening in the first place?"

"That's one way of looking at it."

"This will make me think twice before going to buy my next 50-pack of toilet paper."

