

Table of Contents

Chapter I

An Approach to Political Culture 1

The civic culture. Types of political culture. Political subculture. The civic culture: a mixed political culture. Micro- and macro-politics: political culture as the connecting link. The countries included in the study. The five-nation survey. Survey data and political systems.

Chapter II

Patterns of Political Cognition 45

The impact of government. Awareness of politics. Having information and opinions.

Chapter III

Feelings Toward Government and Politics . . . 63

System affect: national pride. Output affect: expectations of treatment by government and police. Patterns of political communication.

Chapter IV

Patterns of Partisanship 85

Images of party supporters. Psychological distance between parties: marriage within and across party lines. The flow of feeling from community to polity. Types of partisans.

Chapter V

The Obligation to Participate 117

What is the good citizen? National differences in the characteristics of local government. National differences in sense of civic obligation. Demographic patterns.

Chapter VI

The Sense of Civic Competence 136

The distribution of subjective competence. The strategy of influence. National competence. Social groups and subjective competence.

Chapter VII

Citizen Competence and Subject Competence 168

The sense of administrative competence. Citizen and subject competence.

Chapter VIII

Competence, Participation, and Political Allegiance 186

Competence and democratic values. The self-confident citizen: conclusion.

Chapter IX

Social Relations and Civic Cooperation 208

Leisure time and sociability. Valuing outgoing character qualities. Feelings of safety and responsiveness. Social attitudes and political cooperation. Civic cooperation and freedom to communicate. Civic cooperation and social values. Civic cooperation and trust in people. Intensity of partisanship and the integration of polity and society. Conclusion.

Chapter X

Organizational Membership and Civic Competence 244

The distribution of voluntary association membership. Organizational membership and political competence.

Chapter XI

Political Socialization and Civic Competence 266

The theory of political socialization. Early participation in decisions. Social participation and civic competence. Conclusion.

Chapter XII

Profiles of Nations and Groups 307

National patterns. Other demographic patterns.

Chapter XIII

The Civic Culture and Democratic Stability . 337

Power and responsiveness. Norms, perceptions, and activity. The management of affect. Consensus and cleavage. Political culture and stable democracy. The sources of the civic culture. The future of the civic culture.

Index, 375