

Bloomberg Businessweek

October 17 – October 23, 2016

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

Opening Remarks Trump's authoritarian style will linger long after the election	6
Bloomberg View The myth of clean coal • Canada leads the way on climate change	8
Movers ▲ Jack Ma and Steven Spielberg begin a beautiful friendship ▼ Note 7 is no more	11
Global Economics
Investors hunt for gold in Ukraine's black earth	12
Global economic growth groans under record-high debt worldwide	13
Signs of a shift in Putin's oil-production strategy	14
Iran's economic divide becomes a political one as well	14
Companies/Industries
Fashion brands pledge sororities	16
Chinese distillers try to make baijiu more palatable to Westerners	18
Millennials are turning up their noses at mass-market scents	19
Breakdown: The NFL is hit for a 20 percent TV-ratings loss	19
Politics/Policy
Super PACs have put $46 million on the table so far in Nevada's Senate race	20
Who'll be watching the poll watchers on Nov. 8?	21
Congress shouldn't bother watering down the Sept. 11 lawsuit bill. It's weak enough already	22
Technology
Uber shines its headlights on Latin America	25
The bluebird of happiness no longer tweets in Jack Dorsey's office	26
Fiber optics is the future of broadband. Britain's BT opts for the near future	27
Innovation: Taking the air out of the packing-peanut business	28
Markets/Finance
Wall Street lawyers meet (very) quietly each year to discuss how to work together better	30
After one of Germany's hottest IPOs, Rocket Internet has fallen back to earth	31
If you could bank the value of unused vacation days, would you ever take any time off?	33
Focus On/Small Business
In the bungee-jumping business, you can't be too safe. But you can't seem too safe, either	35
A San Francisco design firm helps an Alaska Native company get a foothold in the Lower 48	36
Children of immigrants are returning to Colombia and Peru, bringing U.S.-style business practices	38
Small to Big: A system for speeding fliers through customs and immigration	40
Features
He's With Her Haim Saban really wants Clinton to win. And an IPO for Univision	44
The Art of Eviction No landlord pushes low-rent tenants out better than Steve Croman	50
Scary Market Halloween belongs to Rubie's	56
October Surprise-Fest WikiLeaks' Julian Assange reveals an affinity for Donald Trump	62
Etc.
Sunday nights got you down? You may have the Smondays	67
Sports: Find a ticket reseller to help you beat the box office	70
The Critic: North Face and Moosejaw are using virtual reality to sell actual gear	71
Design: Eight rugs that'll transform your office from the ground up	72
Liquor: It's a nice day for a white whiskey	74
What I Wear to Work: National Review's executive editor sets the right tone with his unbuttoned style	75
How Did I Get Here? Tracey Massey runs Mars Chocolate North America—and still has time to mentor	76

1

"Cover is on Haim Saban, a billionaire and part-owner of Univision who's one of Hillary Clinton's biggest supporters."

"Not sure how billionaire bankers supporting Hillary will be perceived."

"He's not a banker. He made his fortune in the entertainment industry."

"Has he done anything I've heard of?"

"He was the one who brought Power Rangers to the U.S."

"Wow. Was he responsible for just the original Power Rangers or also Power Rangers Time Force, Dino Charge, and the precursor to Dino Charge, Dino Thunder?"

"The focus of the story isn't really Power..."

"We should definitely shoot him in a Power Rangers costume. Only thing to figure out is, which would work best."

2

"Well, he wouldn't wear the costume."

"Thank God."

