

Bloomberg Businessweek

November 28 — December 4, 2016

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

Opening Remarks Trump's trajectory may follow those of other elected autocrats	6
Bloomberg View Don't bully central banks • The trouble with the president-elect's ISIS plan	8
Movers ▲ Weed floats on the NYSE ▼ Cooling Swiss watches and a warming North Pole	11
Global Economics
Modi tries to drain the swamp	12
The World Bank's chief economist attacks the profession	13
Europe braces for the next tremors from Italy	14
Factories from everywhere set up shop in Russia	15
Charlie Rose talks to Sebastian Mallaby about his Alan Greenspan bio	16
Companies/Industries
Take 350 designers with no one in charge—and presto!—another sale for Zara	18
To speed up food recalls, Walmart taps blockchain	20
In China, a spoonful of sugar makes the Champagne go down	21
Politics/Policy
Even if Donald Trump wanted to give up his business interests, it wouldn't be easy	22
Obama-era regulators race for the finish line	24
Sizing up the impact if 740,000 Dreamers leave their jobs	25
Technology
If Elon builds it, the crazies will come	27
Karhoo was said to have $250 million in the bank. It didn't	28
IBM tries to be the ghostbusters of corporate hacking	29
Chewy (no, not that one) adds an occasional oil painting to its online pet supplies	30
Innovation: A hybrid walker/wheelchair to put activity back into aging	31
Markets/Finance
Hillary who? Wall Street and Donald are BFFs now	32
John Paulson's bet on Fannie and Freddie suddenly looks really smart	33
London closes a door on Europe and opens one to the Chinese	34
Features
Alabama Shakes What happens when America's biggest pipeline explodes	36
Memo to HR: Compliance videos don't stop sexual harassment	42
King of K Street Paul Manafort never really went away	50
Etc.
How brands became obsessed with the color pink	55
Drinks: Eight cocktails for winter nights	58
Workplace: Skirt Club attracts women who want to network (and see where the night takes them)	60
Astrology: December provides an opportunity to rethink long-term goals	61
The Critic: Miss Sloane has a lot to like, but can audiences stomach more politics?	62
What I Wear to Work: The global brand leader for W Hotels isn't content with just one bracelet	63
How Did I Get Here? Daniel Lubetzky didn't like his snacking options. Now we have Kind bars	64

①
“The story is about the Colonial Pipeline, specifically the implications of accidents like the explosion in Alabama.”

“The implications are generally good, right? Fire provides warmth, and Lord knows it gets chilly this time of year. Trees just take up valuable space, so it's a quick and easy way to clear some land. And the oil industry is stable to the point of being boring. This at least shakes things up a bit.”

“Have you purposefully avoided reading the story?”

“I'm just trying to stay positive.”

