

APPROACHING HUMAN GEOGRAPHY

This book provides an accessible and informed introduction to the development of new theoretical approaches to human geography. It sets out to explain the key features of these new approaches, and to trace their antecedents and implications. The authors also highlight points of comparison and contrast, inter-connection and dissimilarity.

An introductory chapter describes and accounts for the theoretical diversity within twentieth-century human geography, and particular attention is paid to the transition from environmental and regional approaches to the 'spatial science' of the 1960s. Later chapters deal systematically with different post-1960s approaches: Marxism, humanism, structuration, realism and postmodernism. Each of these chapters deals with the chronological development of the appropriate literature, describes the key claims and arguments, and indicates the particular sorts of substantive concerns that these theoretical materials help to illuminate. The principal chapters of the book are framed by both a preface and an epilogue, which address questions about 'relativism' in approaching human geography, while also stressing the need for continued commitment and critical sensitivity in geographical inquiry.

The book is written in a readable style with generous expositions of key claims and arguments, and with thorough cross-referencing.

THE GUILFORD PRESS
72 Spring Street
New York, NY 10012

CONTENTS

Preface	vii
1 Introduction: Changing Approaches to Human Geography	1
Introduction	1
The emerging concerns of geography in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries: environmental determinism and the regional concept	3
The regional tradition, the quantitative revolution and spatial science	8
The critique of spatial science and the emergence of alternative approaches in the 1970s and 1980s	13
Geography, disciplinary boundaries and academic career paths	20
Concluding comments	25
Notes	25
2 Changing Times and the Development of Marxist Approaches to Human Geography Since the Late 1960s: Still Relevant and Radical After All These Years?	28
Introduction	28
From liberal to Marxist critiques of society	32
The search for mature reflections	42
Engagement with social theory and reconsideration of the role of structures	45
From reformulation to fractious disintegrations?	50
Concluding remarks	54
3 'Peopling' Human Geography and the Development of Humanistic Approaches	57
Introduction	57

	The 'prehistory' of humanistic geography	63
	The emergence of humanistic geography	68
	The elaboration of a geographical humanism	80
4	Structuration Theory: Anthony Giddens and the Bringing Together of Structure and Agency	93
	A middle ground between structure and agency?	93
	Giddens's structurationist project: phase I	96
	Giddens's structurationist project: phase II	107
	Structuration in human geography: two examples	116
	A concluding summary of critique	128
5	Realist Approaches in Human Geography	132
	All roads lead to realism?	132
	A realist philosophy	135
	Applying realist philosophy to social science	139
	Realism, social science and human geography	144
	Realistic practice in human geography	152
	Evaluating the contribution of realism to human geography	158
	Concluding summary of critical reactions to realism	166
6	The Differences of Postmodern Human Geography	170
	Introduction	170
	Considering postmodernism as object	171
	Considering postmodernism as attitude	184
	Coda to postmodern human geography	200
	Epilogue	202
	References	209
	Author Index	235
	Subject Index	239