

Bloomberg Businessweek

March 13 – March 19, 2017

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

Opening Remarks Trump's dubious debt-free America pledge	8
Bloomberg View "Bad banks" are a good idea • China should step up in South Sudan	10
Movers ▲ Mark Zuckerberg's résumé ▼ Snap's share price	13
Global Economics
Tourists are voting with their feet—against Trump	15
An unintended consequence of South Korea's missile shield	16
How Iran wound up with a foothold in Nigeria	17
America's trade imbalance swells in the first days of the new administration	18
Companies/Industries
The dairy industry's modest goal: Teach China to like cheese	20
Johnson & Johnson's 2016 included six costly product-defect verdicts, but this year could be worse	21
Telemundo gains viewers by giving up on telenovelas	22
GM bids Europe a fond farewell	23
Politics/Policy
GOP plans for a border tax are setting off political and corporate battles	25
Alaska grows less prepared for climate change just in time for its arrival	26
A wave of tort-reform bills may turn class actions into an endangered species	28
Martin Schulz channels Angela Merkel in his bid to stop her from winning another election	28
Measuring the real impact of drones on people	29
Republican support for the draft bill to replace Obamacare was...not unanimous	30
Technology
Why Google Fiber failed to make Kansas City sizzle	33
Nintendo goes out on a limb with Switch, its new hybrid gaming system	35
Favorite phrases of the kings of tech	35
Bling you can print is rewriting the high-end jewelry business	36
Innovation: A gadget that creates 3D maps of building interiors and construction sites	37
Markets/Finance
A threat to the Trump bump from rising valuations	38
Leaner, fitter, and faster shale producers are back at work	39
China comes to the Chicago Stock Exchange	40
Where are Americans bringing in more money without lifting a finger?	41
Focus On/Security
ProtectWise's virtual-reality software can make hackers easier to see	42
The issue on which President Trump and Silicon Valley agree: Cybersecurity	43
India's drive to build the world's biggest biometric database gets a boost	44
Edward Snowden unwittingly set off a stampede of investment in security startups	45
Features
Move Fast and Vape Things Big Tobacco's pivot to smokeless nicotine gadgetry	46
Dirty Gold The smuggling career of Harold Vilches started with a Google search	54
Hip-Hop Syrup The companies that fuel purple drank's kick	60
Etc.
New York in the novel New York 2140 isn't much different from today—it's just underwater	67
Fashion: Why deal with multiple articles of clothing when you can ease into a jumpsuit?	70
Rant: LaGuardia Airport has many redeeming qualities. OK, one	72
Survey: There's a reason sports executives aren't star athletes	73
Innovation: A coffee maker tough enough for a construction site	74
What I Wear to Work: Shoshana Fisher sticks with black, so nothing clashes with her skull tattoo	75
How Did I Get Here? For Intel executive Danielle Brown, a funny thing happened on the way to medical school	76

1

"The cover story is on how the tobacco industry is investing in new technologies for delivering nicotine."

"So they want to be more like a Silicon Valley startup, but with the purpose of creating something addictive and potentially destructive?"

"I suppose so."

"Sort of like Twitter."

