

Bloomberg Businessweek

May 8 — May 14, 2017

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

Opening Remarks Facebook and Google's reliance on ads clouds their lofty ideals	6
Bloomberg View For May's Brexit plan, less is more • Be kind to earth: Plug leaky pipes	8
Movers ▲ A $500 million newcomer to Angie's List ▼ Nothing pretty about Etsy's red ink	11
Global Economics
Mexican autoworkers have unions to blame for low wages	12
An uneven recovery threatens Iran's moderate president in the coming election	14
Northeasterners and Midwesterners are flocking to the Sun Belt—again	15
China's shift to services doesn't serve its college grads	16
Companies/Industries
For Chinese high rollers, a call to Manila is the next best thing to betting there	19
Adidas orchestrates a Grand Slam using a 46-year-old shoe	20
Glam, bam, thank you, ma'am—World of Wonder takes drag mainstream	22
Exam question No. 1: How can a for-profit college become a nonprofit college but still make money?	23
Politics/Policy
The impossible math of Trump's tax plan	24
Heads in the sand, New Jersey homeowners insist on walls to hold back the ocean	25
The rising price of coal fuels optimism and investment in West Virginia	28
Technology
No one's making jokes about Microsoft hardware anymore	31
That magnificent Brin and his flying machine	32
Drivers for Uber rival Juno say they've been taken for a ride	33
Who knows what evil lurks in the Shadow Brokers' NSA-quality hacking tools?	34
Innovation: You'll be made in the shade with a solar-powered robotic patio umbrella	35
Markets/Finance
The road has gotten much rougher for subprime auto lenders	37
Cash-strapped priests at Japan's shrines are making deals with developers	38
Mnuchin considers going long—really long—on Treasuries	39
Carnival barkers, food trucks, and music attract shoppers to mall parking lots	40
A warning light flashes for Canada's heated housing market	41
Features
Wal-Mart Tries Again Bentonville has an expensive plan to reverse its internet fortunes	42
Pravda Progeny A little-watched Russian cable network gins up outsize influence	48
Smashing China How rebel trade adviser Peter Navarro made it as far as the White House	54
Etc.
As it transitions from a music review site into a media brand, Pitchfork keeps making noise	59
The Critic: The Weekend Effect is a battle plan for fighting the tyranny of overwork	62
Fashion: Black suits are this season's white-hot look	63
Marketing: Golden Door spa is luring a new generation of A-listers	64
Food: Once just a boring side dish, cauliflower blooms into a culinary sensation	66
What I Wear to Work: It's no surprise that BaubleBar co-founder Amy Jain knows how to accessorize	67
How Did I Get Here? Hamilton puts set designer David Korins center stage	68

1
“Our story is about Wal-Mart. They have a new strategy to compete with Amazon.”

“Best of luck to them. Do you know that last week I got 100 heavy-duty scrubbing pads, 2 gallons of bleach, and a fishnet bodysuit delivered to my door the next day with a touch of a button using Amazon Prime? Can Wal-Mart do that?”

“Why, exactly, did you need those items so urgently?”

“I've already said too much.”

