

Bloomberg Businessweek

May 29 — June 4, 2017

Cover Trail

How the cover gets made

Opening Remarks It will take years for Brazil to overcome its history of corruption	8
Bloomberg View Hope for a new, improved NAFTA • A thriving Africa, a safer world	10
Movers ▲ Fidelity bites on bitcoin ▼ Moody's downgrades China	13
Global Economics
To Iranians, the ballot box represents both stability and change	14
The race is on to replace the unpopular Jacob Zuma as ANC head and, eventually, South Africa's president	15
Poverty and a high sales tax push 30 percent of Puerto Rico's economy underground	17
Hot on the trail of food cartels with the Indonesian central bank's inflation-fighting squads	18
Companies/Industries
Can outsider Jim Hackett steer Ford into the driverless future?	20
Imax sees real potential in virtual-reality centers	22
China's foodmakers try to cook up growth by importing Western-style quality	22
Patriotism is the refuge of a Russian shoe seller	24
Politics/Policy
Trump sends Congress a political statement dressed up as a budget	27
The fate of the GOP's Obamacare repeal bill runs through the office of Louisiana's junior senator	28
The Republicans just made it harder to require drug tests. Oops!	30
How Trump could set tariffs in the name of national security	31
Technology
Smoke was pouring out of Fyre Media weeks before its disastrous music festival	33
Washington, D.C., cabbies will go app for app against Uber	34
Government mileage standards can't cool automakers' lust for power	35
Blackbird helps get you from small airport to small airport on a small plane for a small price	35
Putting passwords out to pasture	36
Innovation: A portable device that gives ventilator-assisted patients more freedom to move	37
Markets/Finance
Power plants rise, electricity prices fall, and profits get squeezed	38
A financial adviser to British expats is under SEC scrutiny, former employees say	39
American tax cheats who move money out of Swiss banks should fear the "leaver list"	41
Features
The Very Hard Sell Alexion used scare tactics and strong-arming to find and keep patients	42
Court Order A Dickensian throwback, Britain's clerks are highly paid and oddly powerful	48
Halting Hate Facebook goes on the "counternarrative" attack against extremist groups	56
Etc.
You can have your own social media team, like Zuckerberg's, for only $25,000 a month	63
Health: An Ayurvedic alternative to sports gels	66
Retail: Startup Fitz will organize your closet without taking the shirt off your back	67
Sports: A monumental collection of memorabilia hits the market	68
The Critic: HBO's The Wizard of Lies doesn't make Bernie Madoff's motivations any clearer	70
What I Wear to Work: Apartment Therapy CEO Maxwell Ryan likes to be comfortable, but not too casual	71
How Did I Get Here?: Hyatt Hotels CEO Mark Hoplamazian advocates embracing ignorance	72

1

"The story is on rare-disease drugs. Pharmaceutical companies such as Alexion are able to charge up to $700,000 a year for them, and they resort to questionable tactics to keep people on them."

"Wow, that's an insane amount of money for pills."

"It's actually administered through an infusion."

4

COVER AND COVER TRAIL: PHOTOGRAPH BY SARAH ANNE WARD FOR BLOOMBERG BUSINESSWEEK; PROF. STYLIST: PAOLA ANDREA RAMIREZ

