CONTENTS

Introduction: Chronic Instability in the Middle East 9
Modernisation as the cause of instability in the Middle East – too slow or too fast? 9
Creating an alternative theoretical model: uneven modernisation and its context 16
A new theoretical model of modernisation in the Middle East 25
Four possible macro comparisons of the Middle Eastern pattern of modernisation 26
Operationalisation of the model of uneven modernisation and sources of empirical data 29
From the macro-level of structures to the micro-level of actors and their actions: mechanisms of destabilisation 31
Methodological, terminological and personal observations 35

Political Modernisation: Weak and Authoritarian States 39
Frozen political modernisation in an international comparison: the democratic deficit 41
Regional comparison: the democratic deficit of Middle Eastern regimes 46
The second dimension of political modernisation: a weak state and a governance deficit 50
The character of Middle Eastern regimes and the character of political repertoires of contention 57
Political regimes and political repertoires: a weak authoritarian state, revolution and terrorism 60

(1) The birth of political actors: mass political participation and rigid political systems 69
(2) The discrepancy between preferences and reality: the desire for democracy, prosperity and conservative morals 73
(3) The discrediting of unscrupulous dictators, the invention of tradition and the moralising drive of Islam 89
(5) The current conflict as a continuation of history 102
(6) The decline of secular doctrines: an ideological vacuum and Islam as an alternative 105
(7) The chronic crisis of the legitimacy of regimes: the career of Middle Eastern ideologies 111
(8) The turn to religion: official Islam and the risky strategy of regimes 135

(9) Domesticated clerics and the decline of the traditional religious authorities 138
(10) Oil rent, the power pyramid and the socio-economic alienation of regimes 148
(11) The cultural alienation of westernised regimes: cultural decolonisation 160
(12) Clientelism and the alienation of the regime from the rest of the population 165
(13) Military clientele: co-opting of the army, polarisation of society 169
(14) Terrorism as the continuation of politics by other means 179

Economic Modernisation: Volatile and Distorted 182
Oil rent and distorted economic development: the Dutch disease 182
International comparison: the Middle East and other macroregions 185
Regional comparison of Middle Eastern countries: a two-speed region 189
Rapid economic development as a possible factor in political destabilisation 191
The model's application to the post-colonial Arab world: oil rent versus neoliberal reforms 194
The international context: the food crisis and political destabilisation 198

Population Explosion: The Middle East and Its Abandoned Young People 202
International comparison: the Middle East and other world macroregions 202
Regional comparison: a comparison of Middle Eastern countries 204
Young people caught in the trap of uneven modernisation: divergence in the rate of demographic, economic and political change 207
A historical comparison of the demographic revolution: Europe past and the Middle East present 209

(1) Rebellious youth: identity crisis, intergenerational conflict and adolescence 213
(2) The leisure of the "Arab street": a blessing or a curse? 223
(3) The attitudes and aspirations of young people on the eve of revolution: the conflict between hopes and reality 226
(4) A lost generation: the population dynamic versus a collapsing labour market 228
(5) Demographic marginalisation and the marriage crisis 234
(6) The generational alienation of the power elite: the old cadres versus the young population 238
(7) The uneven population growth of different groups within a heterogeneous state 242

The Media Revolution: The Middle East as a Religious Marketplace 244
The media revolution: an international and regional comparison 246
The media revolution: a historical comparison. Modernisation in the era of the global village 254

(1) The birth of public opinion: the masses discover politics 257
(2) The mobilisation and coordination of collective action: the case of the Arab Spring 262

(3) A shrinking world I: consumer aspirations and the revolution of growing expectations 266
(4) A shrinking world II: visible domestic inequality 269
(5) A shrinking world III: the Turkish model and other reference countries 271
(6) The shrinking Arab world: the democratising effect of Al-Jazeera and the revolutionary domino 276
(7) The media at the service of opposition political Islam 281
(8) The religious market and the erosion of traditional authorities: the struggle over how to interpret Islam 294
(9) Pluralism and fundamentalism 298

The Expansion Of Education: The Middle East and the "Lumpenintelligentsia" 300
The development of education: an international comparison 302
Regional comparison of the development of education in Middle Eastern countries 306

(1) Educational problems: poor quality and growing inequality as evidence of the failure of regimes 309
(2) The awakening of political awareness and the failing Middle Eastern panopticon 316
(3) The boomerang effect of religious education: the Islamic revival and a culture of interpretation 320
(4) Secondary school political chemistry: the reaction of disgruntled teachers and students 332
(5) Universities as centres of opposition 335
(6) The battle over the interpretation of Islam: the loss of the monopoly of traditional authorities and the arrival of new interpreters 344
(7) Counter-productive reactions on the part of regimes: I speak in the name of Islam – I have power 348
(8) The westernised mindset and the creolisation of Islam: Western ideology and the invention of tradition 350
(9) Growth in aspirations and the unemployed "lumpen-intelligentsia" 359
(10) The alienation and radicalisation of the intelligentsia 362

The Boom In Megacities: A Whirlwind of Urbanisation in the Middle East 372
Urbanisation Middle Eastern-style: international and historical comparison 372
Urbanisation and uneven modernisation 377
Urbanisation and (non)secularisation: European past, Middle Eastern present 380

(1) Unmanageable urbanisation: discredited regimes and their doctrine of development 382
(2) Spatial concentration: the potential for political agitation, organisation and mobilisation 384
(3) Urban unemployment: voluntary simplicity instead of revolution? 385

(4) Shrinking of the social world: visible inequality and the resistance of socially sensitive Islam 393
(5) Urban and rural poverty: new reference groups, new aspirations 394
(6) Islamic charity and civil society: the urban middle classes and the poor as clients 396
(7) The crisis of the overburdened urbanised family: the conservative reaction 399
(8) A threatening urban environment and Islamic feminism 401
(9) Intergenerational alienation: the decline in the authority of rural parents and the search for surrogates 403
(10) Radicalisation of the second and third generation of migrants 404
(11) The city as the modern jahiliyyah: the epitome of moral turpitude 406
(12) The traditional bipolarity of urban and rural Islam: a disturbed balance 418
(13) Peasants into Islamists: socialising functions and surrogate rural communities 420
(14) From folk to political Islam: ideological functions and an orientation for the disoriented 422

Conclusion 424
Four macro-comparisons of modernisation patterns and chronic instability in the Middle East 424
Mechanisms of destabilisation: from macro to micro, from structures to actors 435

References 456
List of figures and tables 473
Index 475