Heinz Zimmermann is a leading scholar at the Population Reference Bureau (PRB) in Washington, DC, and a senior professor of demography at Georgetown University. He has been a demographer at the World Bank. He has worked on population issues around the world for UNFPA, UNICEF, USAID, and other organizations. He received his doctorate in demography from the University of Paris V in 1983. His book, Population Policies: Their Origin, Evolution, and Consequences (1993) received the 2012 Global Media Award of the Population Association of America for work on population. In March 2013, he was elected as a fellow of the Royal Academy of Belgium.

Marco Haase is a national currently working as a management consultant at the University of St. Gallen, where he studied strategic management and international business. He wrote his master's thesis on "Demography Meets Economics: The Long-Run Implications Behind a Demographic Risk Indicator of Sub-Saharan Africa."
