

Table of contents

List of tables	11
List of figures	14
List of acronyms and abbreviations	16
Preface	20
1 Analyzing Chinese politics	23
1.1 Historical foundations	23
1.1.1 Political destabilization in modern history	23
1.1.2 Formative developments and traumatic experiences in recent history	25
1.1.3 Persistent and transformed political traditions	27
1.2 How China is portrayed in Western media	30
1.3 Why China challenges popular assumptions	33
1.4 Utilizing information and data from China	36
1.5 Analytical approaches to Chinese politics	38
1.5.1 Political culture and legitimacy	39
1.5.2 Political elites and power struggles	40
1.5.3 Civil society and bottom-up political change	40
1.5.4 Bureaucratic bargaining	41
1.5.5 Organizational learning	42
1.5.6 Integrated political and economic analysis	43
1.5.7 Combining analytical perspectives	43
2 The Chinese Communist Party and state institutions	46
2.1 Socialist organizational and ideological features	46
2.1.1 Leninist organizational principles	46
2.1.2 Ideology and legitimation in transition	49
2.2 The constitution of the party-state	56
2.2.1 A short constitutional history	57
2.2.2 Key principles in the constitution	57
2.2.3 Constitutional revisions	60
2.2.4 The Communist Party as sovereign of the state	61
2.3 The Chinese Communist Party	62
2.3.1 Party organization and party membership	62

2.3.2	Party congresses and ballots	64
2.3.3	The Politburo and its Standing Committee	66
2.3.4	Central working organs and Leading Small Groups	68
2.3.5	Overlap between party and state bodies	72
2.3.6	Organizational decline and reform efforts	74
2.3.7	The persistence of Leninist patterns of control	75
2.4	The central government	76
2.4.1	The State Council and its inner cabinet	76
2.4.2	Party organs within the State Council	82
2.4.3	The unitary state and decentralization	83
2.5	Provincial- and municipal-level governments	85
2.5.1	Regional administrative organization	85
2.5.2	Regional special interests	90
2.5.3	Informal federalism?	92
2.6	Special Administrative Regions: Hong Kong and Macau	94
2.6.1	Hong Kong's economic role	95
2.6.2	Hong Kong's political trajectory	96
2.6.3	Constraints on democratization	98
2.7	Local governments at the county, township, and village levels	99
2.7.1	The functions of local government	99
2.7.2	Village self-governance and village elections	101
2.7.3	Recent developments and signs of crisis	103
2.8	Public finance	105
2.8.1	Fiscal decentralization	105
2.8.2	Budgets and public debt	109
2.8.3	Expenditure priorities in the national budget	112
2.9	The cadre system and public administration	114
2.9.1	The nomenklatura system for senior cadres	115
2.9.2	Administrative reorganization	118
2.9.3	New approaches in public administration	123
2.10	Legislation, the People's Congresses, and the Political Consultative Conferences	125
2.10.1	Regulation and law-making	125
2.10.2	The People's Congresses	127
2.10.3	The Political Consultative Conferences	136
2.11	The judiciary, police, and penal systems	138
2.11.1	Party control over the judicial and police systems	138
2.11.2	The police	139
2.11.3	Courts and judges	140
2.11.4	Public prosecutors	143
2.11.5	Attorneys	143

2.11.6 Criminal law and the penal system	144
2.11.7 Judicial reform	145
2.12 The military and politics	147
2.12.1 Party control over the military	147
2.12.2 The political loyalty of the PLA	148
2.12.3 Defense policy and decision-making	148
3 Political leadership	153
3.1 The center of power	154
3.1.1 Shifts in the decision-making system	154
3.1.2 Capacity for policy innovation and imposition	157
3.1.3 “Normal mode” and “crisis mode” in decision-making	158
3.1.4 How unified is the center of power?	162
3.2 Leadership generations: Revolutionaries, technocrats, and recent diversification	163
3.3 The division of labor within the party leadership	166
3.4 Central Leading Small Groups: Top-level decision-making under Xi Jinping	169
3.5 Top leaders	172
3.5.1 Members of the Politburo Standing Committee	173
3.5.2 Senior strategists and advisers	176
3.6 The risks of political succession and Xi Jinping’s presidential style	177
3.7 Informal methods of exercising power	181
3.7.1 Formal versus informal rules	181
3.7.2 The Beidaihe conferences and the role of retired leaders	183
3.7.3 Informal rules of leadership selection and patronage networks	184
3.7.4 Vested interests in flux	187
3.7.5 Informal lobbying, consultations, and think-tanks	189
3.8 Between fragmented authoritarianism and a re-concentration of power	190
4 Governing China’s economy	193
4.1 China’s economic transformation	193
4.2 Economic growth: Official data and alternative indicators	197
4.3 Prerequisites for Chinese economic reform	200
4.4 The political initiation and implementation of economic reform	202
4.5 Government involvement in the Chinese economy	207
4.5.1 Diverse types of ownership and corporate governance	208
4.5.2 Party and government interference in business	210
4.6 The role of government in the banking and financial systems	212
4.7 Economic globalization and government policy	218
4.7.1 Currency policy and external economic relations	218
4.7.2 Capital account controls	222

4.7.3 The political impact of economic globalization	225
4.8 “Cadre capitalism” and corruption	226
4.8.1 Assessing the extent of corruption	227
4.8.2 Informal rules in China’s “administrative market”	228
4.8.3 Various forms of corruption	230
4.8.4 Resistance to combating corruption	233
4.9 Decentralized economic policies and regional disparities	234
4.9.1 The diversity of the regional economies	234
4.9.2 Divergent levels of economic development	236
4.10 The dynamics of a developmental state	238
5 Governing China’s society	242
5.1 Political control and “social management”	242
5.1.1 Changing mechanisms of control	243
5.1.2 Birth control	244
5.1.3 Household registration	246
5.1.4 Society: The focus of active government management	247
5.2 Political controls and popular demands for civil rights	248
5.2.1 Changing concepts of human rights	248
5.2.2 Political opposition and protest movements	251
5.3 Rural society	253
5.3.1 Social change in rural areas	253
5.3.2 Rural poverty and rural development policies	255
5.3.3 Migrant workers and urban–rural integration	257
5.4 Urban society and new social forces	259
5.4.1 Income differentiation and social mobility	259
5.4.2 China’s new middle classes: Professionals and private entrepreneurs	261
5.4.3 Patterns of consumption and political attitudes	264
5.4.4 Indications of a nascent civil society	266
5.5 Social organizations and trade unions	268
5.5.1 State regulation of social organizations	269
5.5.2 Party-controlled trade unions	271
5.5.3 Foreign foundations and international NGOs	272
5.5.4 Prospects for more open interest intermediation	274
5.6 The media and public opinion	274
5.6.1 The commercialization of China’s media	275
5.6.2 Media firms and entrepreneurs	275
5.6.3 Media control and “guidance” of public opinion	277
5.6.4 The Internet and political communications	278
5.7 Ethnic and religious groups	281

5.7.1 Ethnic minorities and autonomous regions	281
5.7.2 Conflicts in Tibet and Xinjiang	283
5.7.3 Religious organizations and groups	285
5.8 The potential for social unrest	288
5.8.1 Labor protests	290
5.8.2 Urbanization and land grabs	291
5.8.3 Environmental protests	292
5.8.4 Arbitrary authorities, rampages, and self-administered justice	293
5.8.5 Crime	294
5.9 The political consequences of social change	295
6 Policy making: Processes and outcomes	298
6.1 Distinctive features of the policy process	300
6.2 Administrative modernization and economic deregulation	314
6.3 Internal security and justice: Abolition of “re-education through labor”	319
6.4 Media policy: Controlling social media	323
6.5 Social security: State pensions for the rural population	328
6.6 Macroeconomic control: Managing the impact of the global financial crisis	334
6.7 Public budgets: The role of local-government financing platforms	338
6.8 Infrastructure policy and the high-speed rail network	342
6.9 Industrial policy and investment catalogs in the automotive sector	346
6.10 Innovation policy: Promoting the Internet of Things	352
6.11 Environmental policy: Curtailing urban air pollution	356
6.12 Food safety: Preventing health risks	362
6.13 Disaster management: Contingency planning and rescue programs	366
6.14 Foreign and security policies: Maritime rights and interests	371
6.15 Urbanization policy: Experimental urban concepts	375
6.16 Internet security: National IT independence and China’s cyber policy	380
6.17 Education policy: Popularization and improvements in vocational training	385
6.18 Mega-projects: China’s South-to-North Water Transfer Project	390
6.19 Strengths, weaknesses, and special characteristics of Chinese policy making	396
7 Perspectives on China’s political development	398
7.1 Erosion of the party-state and restorative efforts	398
7.2 Foundations of Communist Party rule	401
7.3 The underlying fragility of the Chinese political order	403
7.4 Scenarios for political development	408
7.5 The potential for gradual democratic evolution	416
7.6 Is China a possible developmental model for other countries?	419
7.7 Implications for international interactions with China	425

8 Glossary	428
9 References and sources	436
9.1 Reference works	436
9.2 Internet sources	437
9.3 Periodicals	441
9.4 Further readings for individual chapters	441
9.5 Bibliography	457
10 Index	505
11 Contributors	542