

Contents

Acknowledgments	9
The Concept of Indirect Coercion (Michal Smetana and Jan Ludvík)	10
The issue of indirect coercive relationships	11
Three orders of indirect coercion	15
Components of indirect coercion	18
Method and cases	20
References	23
PART 1: FIRST-ORDER INDIRECT COERCION	25
Iran, Israel, and the United States (2003–2015) (Jan Stehlík)	26
Deterrence of the United States: Iran's strategic necessity	28
Israel: the Achilles' heel of America	31
Iran's strategy of indirect deterrence	32
Conclusions	40
References	40
Russia, Ukraine, and the United States (2014–2015) (Vojtěch Bahenský)	44
Supplying lethal arms – the case for doing so	45
Supplying lethal arms – the case against doing so	47
Russian reaction	49
Lethal arms supplies case through prism of indirect coercion	51
What does the case tell us about indirect coercion	54
Conclusions	55
References	56
PART 2: SECOND-ORDER INDIRECT COERCION	61
Sparta, Athens, and Corinth (421–414 BC) (Filip Svítek)	62
Setting the stage with three Grecian actors	62

From war to peace	64
Athenian demands	67
What was Sparta risking?	68
Corinthian motives and aims	70
Projected images and fear	71
Enter Argos	73
The reactions of Corinth; Sparta	73
Questions of alternative action	75
Conclusions	76
References	77

Turkey, Syria, and the PKK (1992–1998) (Veronika Zajícová)	79
Introducing the actors	81
Coercion timeline	82
Syrian response	86
Conclusions	86
References	89

PART 3: THIRD-ORDER INDIRECT COERCION 91

Austria-Hungary, Serbia, Russia (1914) (Štěpán Konopásek)	92
Balkan powder keg	94
Indirect coercion – theoretical framework	95
Mutual relations	96
Confrontational setting	97
Outlines of the July Crisis of 1914	98
Arduous dilemmas of Vienna	100
Belgrade on thin ice	102
Devious double dealing of St. Petersburg	104
Conclusions	106
References	108

Soviet Union, the United Kingdom/France, and the United States (1956)
(Tomáš Lovecký)	109
The Relevance of the case for the concept and basic parameters	109
The crisis	110
Genesis of the Soviet strategy	111
Turning tides	112
Perception of the Soviet threats	113
A credible bluff?	115
The decision	117

The aftermath	119
Conclusions	119
References	121

Germany, Czechoslovakia, and the United Kingdom/France (1938)

(Lucie Hrdinová)	122
Introduction to the Sudeten Crisis	122
Actors' objectives and course of the crisis	124
Threats and responses	128
Success of coercion and consequences	132
Conclusions	134
References	136

Theory and Practice of Indirect Coercion: Conclusions

(Jan Ludvík and Michal Smetana)	139
References	142
Indirect coercion – cross case comparison	143