

Contents

Preface	ix
Acknowledgements	xi
Figure, tables and boxes	xiv
About the authors	xv
Acronyms	xvii
1 Introduction	1
Coercion and compliance	4
Commitment	5
The research	7
The research methodology	9
Structure of the book	17
2. The changing context for the work of development NGOs	19
Introduction	19
The new funding mechanisms	21
The challenges of the new aid architecture	23
Contrasting definitions of development: what is the project?	26
Concluding comment	28
3. The management of development	31
Introduction	31
NGOs and the packaging of aid	32
The language and practice of rational management	34
Given the flaws, why has this approach dominated?	37
Those with power can promote the approaches they prefer	38
The hold of logframe analysis	39
Participatory planning and human development	40
The conceptual basis of participatory planning within donor frameworks	43
Other approaches to planning and implementation exist	44
The missing elements	45
Concluding comment	47
4. The major UK donors and the flow of aid through the NGO sector	49
Introduction	49
The donor context: funding flows 2000–3	51
DFID	52

Who can access this funding?	53
Changing grant models and conditions	56
Local funding	60
Contracts	60
The European Union	61
Medium-sized UK donors: Community Fund and Comic Relief	63
Small UK donors: trusts and foundations	68
UK NGOs as aid recipients	69
5. The NGO context in Uganda and South Africa	73
Uganda	73
NGOs in Uganda	76
South Africa	82
Development challenges in South Africa	84
Conclusion	89
6. Normative conditions: rational management of the aid chain	91
Project cycle management tools in the UK	92
Some different trends	94
Project cycle management tools in South Africa	95
Project cycle management in Uganda	100
Comparative perspectives on the benefits of the logframe	104
Conclusion	106
7. The ties that bind	109
Questioning the status quo as heresy	109
The ties that bind	111
Donor contracts deepening the trends	120
Loosening the ties	122
Conclusion	128
8. Relationships: partnerships, power and participation	129
Introduction	129
The experiences of a faith-based organization in relating to
European donors	130
Donors encouraging alliances and networking: relationships in practice	133
Trying to build different, sustainable relations with local NGOs	140
Conclusion	144
9. Chains of influence in South Africa	147
South African NGOs as partners: from negotiation to vulnerability	148
NGOs and gender mainstreaming: power, tools and meanings	150
Beyond negotiation: training and organizational development
NGOs in South Africa	155
Conclusions	157

10. Listening to the past and building a new future	161
Other research supports our findings, which are relevant globally	161
The key findings concerning the policies and procedures of the aid chain	161
The questions raised by these findings	168
But isn't this all very depressing?	173
Alternative ways of working	176

Appendix	179
-----------------	------------

Organisations interviewed for the mid-level survey of NGO-donor relations in South Africa and Uganda (see Figure 1.2 in chapter 1) that were not in the original aid chain sample established in the UK (see Table 1.1 in chapter 1).	179
--	-----

References	181
-------------------	------------

Websites	189
----------	-----

Index	191
--------------	------------