	Critical science, deconstruction, and ethics	66
	Political Ecology Emergent	67
4	A Field Crystallizes	71
	Chains of Explanation	72
	Peanuts and poverty in Niger	75
	Marginalization	76
	The Silent Violence of famine in Nigeria	77
	Broadly Defined Political Economy	79
	Struggles in Cote D'Ivoire	80
	Twenty-five Years Later	82
Part II Conceptual and Methodological Challenges		85
5	Destruction of Nature: Human Impact and Environmental Degradation	87
	The Focus on Human Impact	90

Defining and Measuring Degradation	91
Loss of natural productivity	92
Loss of biodiversity	93
Loss of usefulness	94
Socio-environmental destruction: creating or shifting risk ecology	96
Limits of Land Degradation: Variability, Disturbance, and Recovery	96
What baseline? Non-human disturbance and variability of ecological systems	97
What impact? Variable response to disturbance	98
Can we go back? Variable recovery from disturbance	101
Methodological Imperatives in Political Analysis of Environmental Destruction	103
6 Construction of Nature: Environmental Knowledges and Imaginaries	107
Why Bother to Argue that Nature (or Forests or Land Degradation . . . ) is Constructed?	108
Choosing targets for political ecological constructivism	109
Debates and motivations	110
Hard and soft constructivism	113
