

Contents

Acknowledgements	9
Preface	11
Introduction: policies, structures, inequalities and values	13
Part One: Policies
1 The labour market: developments and policies	27
1.1 The composition and mobility of the labour force	27
1.2 The flexibility of workers: formal and informal	30
1.3 The unemployed and vulnerable categories	34
1.4 Labour market policies	36
1.5 Conclusion	39
2 The welfare system: past reforms and enduring problems	41
2.1 Moving away from authoritarian paternalism	41
2.2 Initial reforms and subsequent stagnation	43
2.3 Reforms and their actors	45
2.4 Short-term performance and long-term problems	50
2.5 Conclusion	52
3 Social inclusion: implementing EU policies	55
3.1 Steering the policy process	56
3.2 Target population categories	59
3.3 Interactions between economic and social spheres	62
3.4 Monitoring the process	65
3.5 Conclusion	68
Appendix: Laeken indicators on social inclusion	69

Part Two: Inequalities

4 Disparities in earnings: education to the fore	73
4.1 Changes to the system after 1989	74
4.2 The range of disparities and demographic factors	77
4.3 The effects of education, industry and occupation	79
4.4 Political factors and the ownership sector	85
4.5 Conclusion	87
Appendix: Data sources and definitions	88
5 Household income: rising inequality, changing structure	90
5.1 The difficulties of determining well-being	91
5.2 Shifts in the range and system of inequality	93
5.3 The changing structure of inequality	96
5.4 The characteristics of couples	101
5.5 Conclusion	104
Appendix: Data sources, definitions and adjustment of income	105
6 Taxes and transfers: less redistribution, more progressivity	107
6.1 Changes in taxes and family social benefits	108
6.2 Reforms of personal income tax	111
6.3 Indirect taxes and overall redistribution	116
6.4 Taxes and benefits in public opinion	119
6.5 Conclusion	121
Appendix: Survey samples and simulation methods	123

Part Three: Structures

7 The middle class: less advancement than expected	127
7.1 Status of and barriers to the formation of the middle class	128
7.2 A shift in hegemony: from the working class to the middle class	131
7.3 Economic reforms: profiting from and neglecting opportunities	134
7.4 After the reforms: middle-class mechanisms and identity	138
7.5 Conclusion	142
8 Pensioners: changing socio-political status	144
8.1 The communist regime: pensioners as the poor	145
8.2 Establishing democracy: pensioners as a constituency	146
8.3 Reforming the system: future pensioners at stake	151
8.4 New challenges to expectations	155
8.5 Conclusion	158

9 The poor: non-working and working	160
9.1 New situation, new policies	161
9.2 Income-related and subjective poverty	164
9.3 Deprivation in consumption and living conditions	168
9.4 Preventing poverty by redistribution or by employment	171
9.5 Conclusion	174
Appendix: The minimum living income	176
Part Four: Values
10 Work values and job attitudes	181
10.1 Methodological difficulties and previous research	182
10.2 The explanatory framework	185
10.3 Work expectations and conditions	188
10.4 Work commitment and job satisfaction	192
10.5 Conclusion	195
11 The pervasive consumer society	198
11.1 The communist regime: meeting basic needs	199
11.2 Emerging capitalism: how much the better?	202
11.3 Family budgets: less spending on food and more on housing	207
11.4 Consumer society: clients and agencies	210
11.5 Conclusion	213
12 Economic culture in transition	216
12.1 Beyond economic assumptions	217
12.2 Legacies of the past	219
12.3 Key concepts and their varieties	222
12.4 The EU dimension	225
12.5 Conclusion	231
Conclusion: The challenges of the future	233
Annex: Comparative tables	239
Data sources	251
Abbreviations	254
References	257
Summaries of chapters	274
List of tables, figures and schemes	279
Name index	283