Contents

Thermal relationships of organism

	The contract of	Electronic in the second		783
		The full biophysical treatment of fittees mellodeteM
	Intro	duction electrons metabolism		164
	intro	duction		171
	1.1	A note on units		3
	1.2	General principles and the importance of natural his	story	3
2	Energ	gy and heat		6
	21	Fnergy		7
	22	The First Law of Thermodynamics		7
	2.3	Energy at the atomic scale		11
	2.4	Internal energy		14
	2.5	Energy and heat		15
	2.6	Thermodynamic systems		16
	2.7	Work and energy revisited		17
	2.8	Entropy		17
	2.9	The Second Law of Thermodynamics		22
	2.10	The Third Law of Thermodynamics		23
	2.11	Gibbs (free) energy		24
	2.12	Summary		25
		Cryobiology and ecology
3	Temp	erature and its measurement		29
	31	The Zeroth Law of Thermodynamics		20
	3.2	What exactly is temperature?		29
	33	Thermometry: the measurement of temperature		32
	3.4	The gas thermometer and absolute zero		34
	3.5	The thermodynamic temperature scale		35
	3.6	A new definition of temperature?		37
	3.7	Types of scale		37
	3.8	Thermometry: the practical measurement of temper	ature	38
	3.9	The International Temperature Scale	ature	39
	3.10	The measurement of temperature in ecology		39
	3.11	Some general points about thermometry in ecology		46
	3.12	Measuring past temperatures: palaeothermometry		47
	3.13	Summary		51

4 Energy flow in org	anisms
----------------------	--------

4.1	Conduction

- 4.2 Convection
- 4.3 Thermal radiation
- 4.4 Thermal relationships of organisms
- 4.5 Evaporation
- 4.6 The full biophysical treatment of fluxes
- 4.7 Flows of chemical potential energy
- 4.8 A complete energy budget?
- 4.9 Summary

5 Water

51	Water	and	life	on	Farth
0.1	vvalei	anu	me	on	Laiu

- 5.2 Why water?
- 5.3 The hydrogen bond
- 5.4 The physical properties of water
- 5.5 Temperature and water
- 5.6 Solubility of gases (oxygen and carbon dioxide)
- 5.7 Calcium carbonate solubility
- 5.8 The hydrophobic interaction
- 5.9 Water in cells
- 5.10 Summary

6 Freezing

7

6.1The freezing of water16.2Ice in the natural environment16.3Freezing and organisms: some general principles16.4Cryobiology and ecology16.5Single cells in the environment16.6Freezing and multicellular organisms16.7Freezing and fish1	103 104 107 109 110 113 113 113 117
6.2Ice in the natural environment16.3Freezing and organisms: some general principles16.4Cryobiology and ecology16.5Single cells in the environment16.6Freezing and multicellular organisms16.7Freezing and fish1	104 107 109 110 113 113 117
6.3Freezing and organisms: some general principles16.4Cryobiology and ecology16.5Single cells in the environment16.6Freezing and multicellular organisms16.7Freezing and fish1	107 109 110 113 113 117 118
6.4Cryobiology and ecology16.5Single cells in the environment16.6Freezing and multicellular organisms16.7Freezing and fish1	109 110 113 113 117 118
6.5Single cells in the environment16.6Freezing and multicellular organisms16.7Freezing and fish1	110 113 113 117 118
6.6Freezing and multicellular organisms16.7Freezing and fish1	113 113 117 118
6.7 Freezing and fish	113 117 118
	117 118
6.8 Freezing in intertidal marine invertebrates	118
6.9 Freezing in arthropods
6.10 Freezing in terrestrial vertebrates	23
6.11 Freezing in plants	24
6.12 Concluding remarks: the wider context	25
6.13 Summary	27
Temperature and reaction rate	31
71 Rate of reaction	131
7.1 Kate of reaction rate	124
	134
7.3 Transition state theory	137
7.4 Enzyme-catalysed reactions	138
7.5 Evolutionary adaptation of reaction rate to temperature	140
7.6 Managing the cellular environment	47

56

57

60

62

68

73

73

74 79

79

82

82

83

85

86

88

92

94 95

98

99

103

	7.7	The paradox of adaptation		152
	7.8	A subtle problem: describing the relationship betwee	en
		physiological rates and temperature		153
	7.9	Summary		159
8	Meta	bolism		163
	8.1	Metabolism is simple		163
	8.2	Gaining electrons		166
	8.3	Photosynthesis		166
	8.4	Where is the energy?		167
	8.5	Using electrons: metabolism		168
	8.6	Control of ATP synthesis		171
	8.7	Metabolism in ecology		172
	8.8	What processes comprise resting metabolic rate?		177
	8.9	Temperature and metabolic processes at the molecul	ar level	182
	8.10	Temperature and whole-organism metabolism		182
	8.11	Why does resting metabolism increase with tempera	ture?	188
	8.12	Metabolic cold adaptation		189
	8.13	Summary		191
		The energence of growin
9	Temp	erature regulation		196
	0.1	Growth and temperature in the natural environment		200
	9.1	Benavioural thermoregulation		200
	9.2	How do animals sense temperature?		201
	9.3	Generating heat		204
	9.4	Avoiding overheating		209
	9.5	Summary		211
10	Endot	thermy		214
	10.1	The global distribution of oceans: temperatures		~ ~ ~
	10.1	What is endothermy?		214
	10.2	Body temperature in endotherms		215
	10.3	Control of body temperature		218
	10.4	Ecology and body temperature in endotherms	14.6	219
	10.5	What sets the maximum body temperature an endot	herm can have?	221
	10.6	How do endotherms generate their heat?	14.8	222
	10.7	A general picture of obligate heat generation in endo	otherms	227
	10.8	Inermoregulation		228
	10.9	Winter is coming: keeping warm below the INZ		230
	10.10	Keeping cool: endotherms above the INZ		232
	10.11	The evolution of endothermy		234
	10.12	Summary		240
11	Torno	Global patterns of diversity		-
	Torpo	r and hipernation		245
	11.1	Daily torpor		247
	11.2	Hibernation		249
	11.3	Ecology of torpor and hibernation		250
	11.4	The physiology of torpor		257

	11.5	Torpor, hibernation and size		260
	11.6	A phylogenetic perspective		263
	11.7	Summary		264
12	The N	Aetabolic Theory of Ecology		267
	12.1	The influence of size: scaling		267
	12.2	The scaling of metabolic rate		268
	12.3	The West, Brown and Enguist model		271
	12.4	The influence of temperature		276
	12.5	The central equation of the Metabolic Theory of Ecol	Ogy	277
	12.6	The status of the MTE as a theory	~8J	278
	12.7	MTE and mammals revisited		279
	12.8	Does the Metabolic Theory of Ecology constitute a su	eneral
	12.0	theory of thermal biology?	citciui	280
	129	Summary		280
	12.7	outilitary		200
13	Temp	erature, growth and size		285
	remp
	13.1	How should we measure growth rate?		285
	13.2	The energetics of growth		286
	13.3	Temperature and growth		289
	13.4	Growth and temperature in the natural environment		293
	13.5	Modelling growth		296
	13.6	Temperature and size		299
	13.7	Summary		304
		Avoiding overheating		103.
14	Globa	al temperature and life		308
	14.1	The global distribution of temperature on land		308
	14.2	The global distribution of oceanic temperatures		314
	14.3	Are there thermal limits to life?		316
	14.4	Temperature thresholds for life		318
	14.5	Low temperature limits		319
	14.6	The special case of endotherms		321
	14.7	High temperature limits to life		321
	14.8	The thermal limits to life on Earth		324
	14.9	Summary		325
		Thermoregulations rabiw art solutioned and solutions
15	Temp	erature and diversity		329
	15.1	What is biological diversity?		329
	15.2	Some practical issues		330
	15.3	Global diversity: land and ocean		331
	15.4	Global patterns of diversity		333
	15.5	Mechanism		336
	15.6	Temperature and diversity		338
	15.7	Diversity and energy		342
	15.8	Confounding energy with temperature		345
	15.9	Can energy explain everything?		346

	15.10	A final comment: the role of time	346
	15.11	Summary	349
16	Globa	l climate change and its ecological consequences	354
	16.1	The Earth's atmosphere	354
	16.2	Why is the Earth's temperature what it is?	355
	16.3	The greenhouse effect	356
	16.4	The temperature at the Earth's surface	359
	16.5	Ice ages	361
	16.6	Recent climate change	363
	16.7	Organism response to climate change	371
	16.8	Responses to recent climate change	374
	16.9	Final comments	383
	16.10	Summary	384
17	Ten pi	rinciples of thermal ecology	391
	17.1	A few final thoughts	393
Ref Ind	erences ex	rimment and governs us to establish a rigorous framework for us flow of energy, setting standing how organisms perform before we cannot do to the ecological consequences.	395 455