

Contents

Introduction	ix
Selected World Wide Web Sites	x
U.S. Statistics and Map	xii
Canada Statistics and Map	xiii
World Map	xiv
India and South Asia Regional Map	2
Five Images of South Asia	3
India Map	33
Country Reports
India (Republic of India)	34
Afghanistan (Islamic State of Afghanistan)	46
Bangladesh (People's Republic of Bangladesh)	51
Bhutan (Kingdom of Bhutan)	55
Maldives (Republic of Maldives)	59
Nepal (Kingdom of Nepal)	63
Pakistan (Islamic Republic of Pakistan)	68
Sri Lanka (Democratic Socialist Republic of Sri Lanka)	75
Articles	80
South Asia	80
Terrorism In South Asia
1. Five Years after 9/11 , Shahid Javed Burki, Dawn , September 19, 2006. Muslims must (1) condemn all acts of terrorism, (2) adopt political systems that are representative of all citizens, and (3) give highest priority to human development. Declaring the war on terror as against an ideology produces what al Qaeda seeks, an all-out war with the West.	80
2. An Afghan Symbol for Change, Then Failure , David Rohde, New York Times , September 5, 2006. Where American efforts toward Afghan rehabilitation have come up short, Taliban resurgence and drug cultivation are having a devastating impact on security and recovery in Afghanistan.	82
3. "Pakistan Assessment 2006" South Asia Terrorism Portal , satp.org. Terrorist attacks are perpetrated by distinct groups of militants over different regional issues, according to data collected by the Institute for Conflict Management, New Delhi, India.	88
4. The War in Balochistan: A Backgrounder , Praveen Swami, The Hindu , January 12, 2006. Tribal leaders, who seek more independence and a fair share of the states wealth of natural resources, are in intense conflict with national military leaders, who seek to hold the country together by armed authority, began in 1973.	93
5. "India Assessment—2006" , South Asia Terrorism Portal , satp.org. A statistical analysis of terrorist attacks on four different fronts, in Jammu and Kashmir, in the Northeast states, by Maoists (Naxalites) in eight central and eastern states, and foreign-backed Jihadi bomb attacks across the country.	94
6. Inside India's Hidden War , Randeep Ramesh in Bhanupratapur forest, Guardian , May 9, 2006. Mineral rights are behind warfare between leftwing Maoist guerrillas and local militias in the tribal forests in the state of Chhattisgarh.	98
7. Lashkar-e-Taiba's Network , Praveen Swami, The Hindu , December 8, 2005. Kashmiris join Lashkar-e-Taiba cells, based on Pakistani support, from rich and poor backgrounds, out of loyalty and desperation, to commit isolated acts of terror throughout India to shatter its secular government.	100
8. India Fears Some of Its Muslims Are Joining in Terrorism , Somini Sengupta, New York Times , August 9, 2006. India's Muslims are unsettled by police searches for those among them being recruited for terrorist acts in India.	102

9. Gauging Terror — Part II, India, Michael Krepon, YaleGlobal, August 17, 2006. India has exercised restraint when retaliating against terrorist attacks with suspected links to Pakistan-based groups. Because both nations hold nuclear weapons, opening that front in the war on terror could be disastrous. 104
10. Acting Tough, Haroon Habib, The Hindu, April 7, 2006. At long last the Bangladesh government takes action against Islamist extremist militancy by arresting two terrorist organization leaders. 106
11. Civil War Returns to Sri Lanka, Rüdiger Falksohn and Padma Rao, Spiegel Online, August 23, 2006. Military encounters between the Sri Lankan Army and the militant separatist LTTE have increased with appalling impact on civilians and international aid workers since the tsunami hit the east coast of Sri Lanka in December 2004. 108

India as a Global Power

12. Getting India Right, Parag Khanna and C. Raja Mohan, Policy Review, February–March, 2006. India seeks to become a world power, based upon its service sector economic growth, its restraint in nuclear capability development, and its tradition of non-aligned independence in foreign policy. The United States has a good ally to advocate democracy promotion. 111
13. India's Nuclear Albatross, Praful Bidwai, The Hindu, October 7, 2005. India has decreased its international independence, eroded its security, and damaged its credibility by pursuing acceptance as a nuclear power. 120
14. India's Energy Dilemma, Vibhuti Haté, South Asia Monitor, Center for Strategic and International Studies, Number 98, September 7, 2006. India's international strategy involves gaining a diversity of investments and energy suppliers, and avoiding competition with China, all of which have produced foreign policy differences with the United States. 123
15. India's Coming Eclipse of China, Hugo Restall, Far Eastern Economic Review, March 2006. China attracts twelve times more Foreign Direct Investments than India. Whereas China dreams of creating state-owned world-class conglomerates, India has nurtured and protected its own independent entrepreneurs. This base, its more developed financial institutions and its younger workforce give to India a growing advantage over China. 126
16. India's Promise?, Devesh Kapur, Harvard Magazine, July–August 2005. Because of lack of accountability, corruption, and social inequalities, the political system is not able to grapple with long-term challenges. India has shown a remarkable resilience, but these factors bode ill for India's future. 129
17. Leading by Example, Ramya Kannan, The Hindu, January 22, 2006. Rani Sathappan's two terms as local panchayat (council) president were not without hurdles but she managed to overcome them. 133
18. An Interview with Amartya Sen on Alternative Radio, David Barsamian, India Together, September, 2001. Nobel laureate for his work in development economics, Professor Emeritus at Harvard University, and honorary president of OXFAM, Amartya Sen describes his Bengali background and the influence of Rabindranath Tagore. 134
19. Transcript of 'An Interview with N. R. Narayana Murthy', YaleGlobal June 5, 2006. How Infosys, India's second largest software company, has become worth $22 billion in a fast-growing IT international market, the importance of India's 1991 economic reforms, and the challenges that lie ahead. 145
20. 260 Million Indians Still Below Poverty Line, Aarti Dhar, The Hindu, January 28, 2006. Demographic data on poverty, infant mortality, human development, literacy, and sex ratio are unevenly distributed by region and class across India. 148
21. He Lives To See Justice Done, Meena Menon, The Hindu, November 18, 2006. A Dalit (untouchable) family, one of three in the village, is massacred by members of their village for no apparent reason other than the children were educated and witnessed an assault on their cousin. 149
22. On India's Farms, a Plague of Suicide, Somini Sengupta, New York Times, September 19, 2006. Continuing debt, uncertain water supplies, and global competition are leading to an increasing rural despair and suicides among India's farmers. 151
23. Islands of Despair, Kalpana Sharma, The Hindu, October 1, 2006. Rural misery and the crumbling infrastructure in smaller towns take the sheen off Maharashtra's success story. 153

Afghanistan

24. Afghanistan: Qanooni's Moment of Triumph, M. K. Bhadrakumar, The Hindu, January 20, 2006. With Yunus Qanooni's election as Parliament Speaker, a complex calculus of power is forming. Mr. Qanooni's political platform is far from irreconcilable with that of President Hamid Karzai. 155
25. Afghanistan's Drug Habit, Joel Hafvenstein, New York Times, September 20, 2006. Plans to create "alternative livelihoods" for Afghan farmers has failed because of a lack of security. Creating effective local police forces, purging drug kingpins from government and disarming militias is all necessary. 157
26. Taliban Truce in District of Afghanistan Sets Off Debate, Carlotta Gall and Abdul Waheed Wafa, New York Times, December 2, 2006. The elders in the district of Musa Qala in Helmand Province, in search for peace and relief from bombing by NATO forces, negotiated an agreement with the Taliban and the British NATO and Afghan police units to cease fire and withdraw. 159
27. Tales of the Veil, Taran N. Khan, The Hindu, October 15, 2006. Five Afghan women make a film on their fluid, intensely personal and often complex relationship to the chadori, revealing stories hidden behind everyday lives. 161

Bangladesh

28. Nobel Comes Just in Time for Troubled Bangladesh, Somini Sengupta, International Herald Tribune, October 20, 2006. While the leading political parties are wrangling over the conduct of national elections scheduled 2007, the award of the Nobel Peace Prize to Professor Muhammad Yunus and the Grameen Bank, has come as welcome cause for national celebration. 163
29. Poverty and Peace, The Hindu, October 16, 2006. The Norwegian Nobel Committee has recognized that lasting peace is not possible without dealing with poverty. Professor Yunus and his Grameen Bank deserve credit for progress in human development in Bangladesh. 165

Bhutan

30. Bhutan's Democratic Puzzle, Dharma Adhikari, Opendemocracy.net, June 30, 2006. The exotic, benign image of the Himalayan kingdom of Bhutan cannot conceal the battle between authoritarian politics and democratic dissent that is shaping its future. 166

Maldives

31. Protests in Paradise: Repression in the Maldives, Amnesty International, November 10, 2006. An account by journalist Jennifer Latheef of police brutality and her own imprisonment for demonstrating against the repression of the movement for greater democracy in the Maldives. 170

Nepal

32. In Nepal, Time to Check the Dangerous Drift, Siddharth Varadarajan, The Hindu, September 20, 2006. The road map for the formation of an interim government with Maoist participation is in place. But powerful forces are intervening to derail the process. 172
33. From Maoism to Fascism in the Himalayas?, Thomas A. Marks, SATP Report, October 16, 2000. The Maoist leadership new commitment to political competition should not hide their blatant quest for power. The Nepali people and their neighbor India should not be misled by Maoist actions that seek to talk peaceful politics but engage in terrorist behavior. 174

Pakistan

34. Islam, Militarism, and the 2007-2008 Elections in Pakistan, Frédéric Grare, Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, August 2006. A central issue is whether President Musharraf, as chief of army staff, will allow democratically elected civilian government to happen. The greatest problem in Pakistan is not Islamism, but militarism. 178
35. Textile Export Strategy, Dawn, October 2, 2006. As Pakistan's textile exports drop, the government seeks a paradigm shift to make the industry competitive globally. It needs to change its archaic management system and provide for greater human resource development. 188
36. For Pakistan, American Aid Is All Guns, No Butter, Helene Cooper, New York Times, February 16, 2006. Mr. Ahsan, chief executive of Irfan Textiles Pvt. Ltd. in Lahore, stresses the need for more favorable trade concessions from America to allow his textile trade to survive, as he watches the local mob burn his office building to the ground. 189

Sri Lanka

- 37. Letter from Sri Lanka: Tides of War, Philip Gourevitch, The New Yorker, 191
August 1, 2005. A violent movement to establish an independent Tamil Eelam in the northeast part of the island has made all of the peoples of that area victims of unmitigated war.
- 38. A Crisis and an Opportunity, B. Muralidhar Reddy, The Hindu, 199
September 29, 2006. The latest report of the Sri Lanka Monitoring Mission (SLMM) on violations of the February 2002 ceasefire agreement between the LTTE and the government, underlines the need for a speedy return to the dialogue table.

Glossary of Terms and Abbreviations 201

Bibliography 205

Index 208