

CONTENTS

- SEPTEMBRE: Never the deux shall meet 9
Why the French distrust all English-speakers, and more particularly anyone who can't speak
French (for example, moi).
- OCTOBRE: One foot in the merde 57
I visit different parts of Paris, touristy and less so, treading in plenty of dog-poop, literal and metaphorical.
- NOVEMBRE: Make yourself chez moi 101
Looking for an apartment. The garret myth – shared hole-in-the-floor toilets are “romantic”?
- DÉCEMBRE: God save the cuisine 145
With my palate attuned to French cuisine, I try my best to get nostalgic about British food.
- JANVIER: A maison in the country 189
I discover the EU-subsidized quaintness of rural France and decide to buy a suspiciously cheap cottage.
- FÉVRIER: Make amour, not war 247
Tensions as the Iraq War looms. Meanwhile, a girl tries her best to turn me into a Latin lover with an intensive course in French sexual traditions.

- MARS: The joy of suppositories 279
I explore France's wildly generous medical system, and even try out typical French "treatment by the back door".
- AVRIL: Liberté, égalité, get out of my way 325
I find that the French are secretly quite fond of English-speakers after all. This is especially true of the exotic Florence.
- MAI: 1968 and all that 367
With countless long weekends, holiday allowances to be used up and the inevitable strikes, the French know that if you haven't finished your year's work by May 1, you're in the merde.
