

CONTENTS

List of figures	xi
List of tables	xv
Sounds and symbols used in the text	xvii
Acknowledgements	xxi
Maps	xxiv
Chapter 1 Introduction	1
What is sociolinguistics?	1
How do sociolinguists study sociolinguistics?	1
Making broader connections	2
Sociolinguistic questions	2
Structure of this book	3
On quantitative and qualitative methods	6
On sociolinguistic methods more generally	7
Using this book with The Routledge Sociolinguistics Reader	8
Chapter 2 Variation and language	10
Variables and variants	10
Regional dialectology: mapping speakers and places	13
Using regional dialect data to inform theory	15
Standards, norms and alternations from the norms	18
Martha's Vineyard: a study of social dialects	18
Stereotypes, markers and indicators	26
Factors motivating variation	27
Chapter summary	29
Further reading	30
Chapter 3 Variation and style	31
Introduction	31
Studying variation in speakers' style	32
The New York City social dialect survey	33
Prestige of a variable	41
In search of the unknowable: the observer's paradox	42
Challenging style as attention to speech	44
Chapter summary	56
Further reading	57

Chapter 4 Language attitudes	58
Introduction	58
Language attitudes in language change	59
Linguistic relativism	64
Reclaiming derogatory terms	66
Perceptual dialectology	69
Attitudes to language: identities and accommodation	72
Social identity theory	73
Accommodation theory	75
Chapter summary	82
Further reading	83
Chapter 5 Being polite as a variable in speech	84
Introduction	84
Theories of politeness	86
Applications of politeness theory: intercultural communication	100
Critiques of politeness theory	102
Chapter summary	105
Further reading	106
Chapter 6 Multilingualism and language choice	107
Introduction	107
Language policy and language planning in multilingual societies	108
Language rights in South Africa's constitution	109
Language rights in Vanuatu's constitution	111
Ethnolinguistic vitality	112
Using the model of language vitality	115
Diglossia in a community	118
Is 'vitality' the same as 'prestige'?	119
Code switching and code mixing	120
Speech levels as different codes	130
Chapter summary	132
Further reading	133
Chapter 7 Real time and apparent time	135
Introduction	135
Studying change over time	136
Real time studies of change	138
Apparent time studies of change	140
Real time tests of the apparent time construct	147
Profiles of change	152
Challenges associated with real and apparent time sampling	159
Language and ageing	161
Chapter summary	162
Further reading	162

Chapter 8 Social class	164
Introduction	164
Social class	165
Class as a factor in linguistic variation	169
Fine and broad stratification	174
Cross-over effects and change from above/below	179
Class and historical sociolinguistics	185
The intersection of class and style	190
Chapter summary	192
Further reading	193
Chapter 9 Social networks and communities of practice	194
Introduction	194
Social networks	194
Communities of practice: highly local networks	200
Case studies of social networks and language variation	201
Not all networks are equal	205
How occupation interacts with social networks	207
Who leads?	209
Chapter summary	211
Further reading	211
Chapter 10 Gender	212
Introduction	212
Sex or gender?	213
Exclusive gender differences	213
Preferential gender differences	217
Principles of gender and variation: a historical picture	218
Moving beyond Labov's principles	231
Gender practices	233
Strategic use of gender differences	238
Gendered style	242
Gender and sexuality	242
Wider implications of rethinking gender	245
Chapter summary	247
Further reading	247
Chapter 11 Language contact	249
How contact between varieties affects variation and change	249
Dialect levelling	250
Global contact: global English?	253
Contact-induced change	259
Sociolinguistic constraints on contact	270
Chapter summary	276
Further reading	276
Chapter 12 Looking back and looking ahead	278
Variation is what we know	278

281	Chapter 8 Social class	281
285	Introduction	285
287	Social class	287
18	Class as a factor in linguistic variation	18
14	Fine and broad stratification	14
289	Cross-over effects and change from above	289
305	Class and historical sociolinguistics	305
317	The intersection of class and style	317
333	Chapter summary	333
28	Further reading	28
68	Further reading	68
194	Chapter 9 Social networks and communities of practice	194
194	Introduction	194
200	Communities of practice: highly local networks	200
201	Communities of practice: wider networks and linguistic variation	201
205	Not all networks are equal	205
207	How occupation interacts with social networks	207
209	Who leads?	209
211	Chapter summary	211
202	Further reading	202
202	Further reading	202
212	Chapter 10 Gender	212
212	Introduction	212
213	Sex or gender?	213
215	Exclusive gender differences	215
217	Potential gender differences: a gender to learn and go to	217
218	Principles of gender and variation: a historical perspective	218
221	Moving beyond Labov's phonological gender and style	221
223	Gender practices	223
228	Strategic use of gender differences: varieties	228
242	Chapter summary	242
242	Further reading	242
245	Gender and sexuality	245
245	Wider implications of rethinking gender	245
247	Chapter summary	247
247	Further reading	247
248	Further reading	248
248	Chapter 11 Language contact	248
249	How contact between varieties affects variation and change	249
250	Dialect levelling: contact and processes in contact	250
253	Global contact: global English	253
259	Constrained change: the role of historical cognates	259
270	Sociolinguistic constraints on contact	270
276	Chapter summary	276
276	Further reading	276
278	Further reading	278
278	Chapter 12 Looking back and looking ahead	278
278	Variation is what we know	278
184	Theory in sociolinguistics	184
185	Interpreting and motivating variation	185
185	A final word: the triumph of multiple causation	185
189	Notes on the exercises	189
198	Glossary	198
199	Bibliography	199
200	Index	200