

Contents

Preface	xii
Acknowledgements	xiii
1 What is reading?	1
1 Defining reading	1
2 Reasons for reading	2
2.1 Reading in different ways for different purposes	2
2.2 Authentic reasons for reading	3
2.3 Why do you read the FL?	3
3 Getting a message from a text	4
4 The communication process	4
4.1 Is the reader's role passive?	5
4.2 What makes a text difficult?	5
4.3 Shared assumptions	6
4.4 Identifying presuppositions	7
4.5 Total understanding?	8
4.6 Active involvement of the reader	9
4.7 Reading as interaction	10
4.8 Making sense of the text	10
4.9 Prediction	11
5 Text and discourse	12
5.1 Signification and value	12
5.2 Text and non-text	15
5.3 Coherence and cohesion	15
5.4 Coherence without cohesion	16
6 Reading and meaning	17
2 Reading for what purpose?	19
1 Reading in the FL classroom	19
1.1 Reading and language improvement	19
1.2 Characteristics of FL textbooks	19
1.3 Language lessons and reading lessons	20
2 Aims of a reading programme	21
3 The role of the teacher	22
4 Intensive and extensive reading	23
3 Selecting a text	25
1 Readability	25
1.1 Assessing the students' level	25
1.2 How much new vocabulary?	26
1.3 Structural difficulty	26
1.4 Measuring readability	26
1.5 Cloze as an indicator of readability	28

2	Suitability of content	29
2.1	Finding out what students like	29
2.2	Guidelines for text selection	30
3	Exploitability	30
3.1	The purpose of the reading lesson	31
4	Reading skills and strategies	31
5	Simplified or authentic texts?	32
4	Increasing and varying reading speed	33
1	Speed and comprehension	33
2	Eye movements and sense groups	33
3	Flexibility	34
4	Scanning and skimming	34
5	What sort of text shall we use?	35
6	What speeds should be expected?	35
7	Finding out students' reading speed	36
8	What is adequate comprehension?	37
9	Reading habits in the L1	37
10	Faulty reading habits	37
10.1	Subvocalizing	37
10.2	Finger-pointing	38
10.3	Regressions	38
11	Some approaches to improving reading speed	38
11.1	Machines	38
11.2	Slides and OHP	39
11.3	Scanning	40
11.4	Skimming	40
12	A reminder	41
5	Utilizing non-text information	42
1	Graphic conventions	42
1.1	Spacing, indentation, layout	42
1.2	Choice of type	43
1.3	Punctuation	45
1.4	Symbols	46
2	What we can learn from a book before reading it: reference apparatus	47
2.1	The title	48
2.2	The blurb	48
2.3	Biographical information about the writer	49
2.4	The summary and table of contents	49
2.5	Running titles	50
2.6	Preliminary material: foreword, preface, and introduction	50
2.7	Non-verbal material: lists of diagrams, illustrations, etc.	51
2.8	The index	51
2.9	Other reference apparatus	52
3	How we make use of non-verbal information	52
3.1	Recipes for exercises	53
6	Word-attack skills	65
1	The vocabulary problem	65
2	Lexical items and attack skills	65

3	Phonics	66
4	Structural clues	66
5	Morphological information	67
6	Inference from context	69
	6.1 Training students to infer	70
	6.2 Recipes for exercises	72
	6.3 Clues and lexical density	73
7	Active, receptive and throw-away vocabulary	74
8	Learning to ignore difficult words	75
9	What makes words difficult?	76
	9.1 Idioms	76
	9.2 Transfer of meaning	76
	9.3 Words with several meanings	77
	9.4 Sub-technical vocabulary	77
	9.5 Superordinates	77
	9.6 Synonyms and antonyms	78
	9.7 Irony	78
10	Using a dictionary	78
7	Text-attack skills (1): Signification and cohesion	80
1	Text and discourse	80
2	Four kinds of meaning	80
	2.1 Conceptual meaning	80
	2.2 Propositional meaning	80
	2.3 Contextual meaning	81
	2.4 Pragmatic meaning	81
3	The meanings in the text and the reader's understanding	82
4	Problems in understanding texts	82
	4.1 Concepts	83
	4.2 Vocabulary and sentence structure	83
	4.3 Cohesive devices	83
	4.4 Discourse markers	83
	4.5 Problems beyond the plain sense	83
5	Training text-attack skills	84
	5.1 The problem of credibility	84
	5.2 Identifying the text-attack skills	84
	5.3 Sources of exercises	84
	5.4 Displaying a text	85
6	TAS 1 Understanding sentence syntax	85
	6.1 Complex noun groups	86
	6.2 Nominalization	86
	6.3 Co-ordination	87
	6.4 Subordination: noun clauses	87
	6.5 Participial and prepositional phrases	88
	6.6 Simplifying sentences	88
	6.7 Caution	89
7	TAS 2 Recognizing and interpreting cohesive devices	89
	7.1 Subskill 1 Interpreting reference and substitution	90
	7.2 Training Subskill 1	91
	7.3 Subskill 2 Interpreting elliptical expressions	92
	7.4 Training Subskill 2	93
	7.5 Subskill 3 Interpreting lexical cohesion	94

7.6	Training Subskill 3	95
8	TAS 3 Interpreting discourse markers	95
8.1	Group A markers: signals of sequence of events	96
8.2	Group B markers: signals of discourse organization	96
8.3	Group C markers: signals of the writer's point of view	97
8.4	Training TAS 3	98
8	Text-attack skills (2): Discourse	101
1	Beyond text and into discourse	101
2	TAS 4 Recognizing functional value	101
2.1	Categories of functional value	101
2.2	The multifunctional utterance	104
2.3	Training TAS 4	105
3	TAS 5 Tracing and interpreting rhetorical organization	107
3.1	Rhetorical structure	107
3.2	Content and organization	108
3.3	Organization within the sentence	108
3.4	Organizing sequences of sentences	109
3.5	Organization above paragraph level	109
3.6	Training TAS 5	110
4	TAS 6 Recognizing the presuppositions underlying the text	116
4.1	Presupposition and rhetorical structure	116
5	TAS 7 Recognizing implications and making inferences	117
6	Training TAS 6 and TAS 7	118
7	TAS 8 Prediction	120
7.1	Training TAS 8	120
8	TAS 9 Integration and application	122
8.1	Training TAS 9	123
9	Questioning	125
1	Teaching or testing?	125
2	Can questions help readers?	125
3	Teaching through multiple choice	126
4	Discussion is the key	127
5	The purpose of questioning	127
6	Forms of question	128
7	Presentation of questions	129
7.1	Written or spoken?	129
7.2	Open-ended, multiple choice or true/false?	129
7.3	The language of responses	131
7.4	The language of questions	131
8	Types of question	132
8.1	Questions of literal comprehension	132
8.2	Questions involving reorganization or reinterpretation	132
8.3	Questions of inference	132
8.4	Questions of evaluation	133
8.5	Questions of personal response	133
9	Questions concerned with how the writer says what he means	133
10	Assessing questions	134
11	Unsatisfactory questions	134

10 Other forms of exploitation	136
1 A more flexible approach	136
2 Feedback: the process of understanding and the outcome	136
3 The primary purpose of reading tasks: process, not outcome	137
4 Kinds of reading task	137
4.1 Outcomes mainly not requiring language	137
4.2 Outcomes involving spoken language	137
4.3 Outcomes involving writing	140
4.4 Cloze procedure as a teaching device	143
4.5 Group work	144
11 An intensive reading lesson	146
1 Objectives of an intensive reading programme	146
2 Help from the teacher: how much and what kind?	146
2.1 Getting out of the way of the text	146
2.2 The student's role as reader	147
2.3 The text and its effect on student performance	147
2.4 Reasons why students fail	147
2.5 The teacher's responsibilities	148
3 The need for a flexible programme	148
4 Planning a text-based lesson	149
4.1 Global or detailed study?	150
4.2 Reading as making hypotheses	150
4.3 Accuracy and overall message	151
4.4 Assessing the learning potential of a text	151
4.5 Guiding your students	152
5 Guidance before reading	152
5.1 Providing a reason for reading	153
5.2 Introducing the text	153
5.3 Breaking up the text	155
5.4 Dealing with new language	157
5.5 Signpost questions	158
6 Guidance while reading is under way	159
6.1 Three kinds of class organization	159
6.2 Guidance from the text: the individualized approach	160
6.3 Guidance from the teacher: the whole class approach	161
6.4 Guidance from fellow students: the group approach	162
7 Guidance when reading has been completed	164
8 Footnote: a possible sequence of teaching	166
12 An extensive reading programme	167
1 The cycle of frustration and the cycle of growth	167
2 Why encourage extensive reading?	168
3 Reading more and reading better	168
4 Requiring them to read	168
4.1 Reading in the classroom	168
4.2 Second language reading across the curriculum	169
4.3 Reading in FL and L1	170
5 Making them want to read	171
5.1 Promoting the reading habit	171
5.2 Choosing books	171
5.3 Acquiring books	172

6	Organizing a library	174
6.1	A class library	174
6.2	The school library	174
6.3	Running the library	174
6.4	Storing supplementary readers	175
6.5	Classifying the class library	177
6.6	Coding linguistic levels	177
6.7	Classifying supplementary readers in the school library	179
6.8	Discarding books	179
6.9	Losses and damage	180
6.10	Recurrent budget	180
6.11	Training library skills	181
7	Organizing a reading programme	182
7.1	Co-operation	182
7.2	Assessing linguistic levels	183
7.3	A graded cloze test	183
7.4	Rough and ready assessment by cloze testing	184
7.5	Remedial reading	185
7.6	Creating interest in reading	186
7.7	Incentives to read	186
7.8	Checking extensive reading	187
7.9	Reading cards and reading laboratories	188
7.10	Using a class reader	189
7.11	Key passages	190
7.12	Overall assessment and follow-up activity	190
Conclusion: The teacher as reader		192
1	Readers are made by readers	192
2	How much do you read?	192
3	If you read very little in any language	193
4	If you don't read much in the FL	193
5	Reading the class library	194
6	Improving your own reading	194
Appendix A: Texts		195
1	Archaeopteryx	195
2	A Son to be Proud of	196
3	Red Flag Canal	196
4	The House on the Hill	197
5	Airships	197
6	Ecology	197
7	Acids	198
8	Malnutrition	199
9	Schoolboy Tyranny	199
10	Pollution	200
11	The Survival of the Fittest	201
Appendix B: Extracts from reading courses		203
1	Airships	203
2	Ecology	204

3	Acids	207
4	Malnutrition	211
5	Schoolboy Tyranny	215
6	Pollution	218
7	The Survival of the Fittest	220
8	The House on the Hill	224
9	Notices	226
Appendix C British publishers of graded readers for students of English as a second or foreign language		228
Appendix D Vocabulary levels of some major series of British EFL readers		230
Bibliography		231