

■ IN BRIEF	9	Marathon's big buy; icebergs for Cape Town
■ AGENDA	10	Ford's annual meeting goes online; will TV hurt Disney?
■ THE BLOOMBERG VIEW	10	Trump shouldn't be so tough on visitors from abroad
■ REMARKS	12	Journalism's future: More digital, more lucrative, less fake
1 BUSINESS	17	HNA, China's buyout king, struggles to sweat off the debt
	19	Fast fashion learns a thing or two about recycling
	21	If T-Mobile and Sprint merge, AT&T and Verizon benefit
2 TECHNOLOGY	23	What happens when Airbnb owns your apartment house
	24	Lei Jun's plan to turn Xiaomi into the next Apple

3 FINANCE

	28	How a tiny college tops Harvard in endowment returns
	30	As dairy markets swing, futures are in bloom
	31	Mick Mulvaney's watchdog agency is on a starvation diet

4 ECONOMICS	32	A new book's bold Rx to correct economic inequality
	35	For Russians just scraping by, there's always day trading

5 POLITICS	36	Pre-summit, Kim shows he knows the art of the deal, too
	38	Citigroup slaps gunmakers, the SEC slaps Citigroup
	39	The Kochs have a message for you: Embrace the tax cut

CORRECTION "An Ever-Expanding, Never-Ending, Time-Sucking Rabbit Hole of a Problem That Starts With YouTube" (Features, April 30) suggested that a company blog post told readers YouTube planned to appoint 10,000 moderators. The post made clear that the total included moderators for Google.

The Business of Equality

44

Cristina Chen-Oster's 13-year battle with Goldman Sachs just got real

50

Think age discrimination dominates U.S. tech? You should see China

54

Laws can promote it, but true gender equality is a long way off

56

The Harvard undergrad trying to diversify Wall Street

60

Designing an open office employees actually like

62

White guys tend to fund white guys. But if a robot called the shots

68

Game Changer: Tina Tchen of the Time's Up Legal Defense Fund

