

Contents

Preface

xi

Part I. Human Beings and the Other Animals

1. Are People More Important than the Other Animals?	3
1.1 Introduction	3
1.2 Reasons to Treat People and Animals Differently	5
1.3 Tethered Values	9
1.4 Why Tethered Values and Superior Importance Are (Almost) Incompatible	12
2. Animal Selves and the Good	16
2.1 The Origin of the Good	16
2.2 Objections	22
2.3 Self-Consciousness and the Self	29
2.4 Active and Passive Self-Constitution	34
3. What's Different about Being Human?	36
3.1 Introduction	36
3.2 Rational and Instinctive Minds	38
3.3 Evaluating Reasons and Evaluating the Self	44
3.4 Species Being	48
3.5 Ethics and Science	50
4. The Case against Human Superiority	53
4.1 Introduction	53
4.2 Does Morality Make Humans Superior to the Other Animals?	55
4.3 The Implications of Cognitive Sophistication	59
4.4 Are Humans Better Off than the Other Animals?	67
4.5 Conclusion	73

Part II. Immanuel Kant and the Animals

5. Kant, Marginal Cases, and Moral Standing	77
5.1 Human Beings as Ends in Themselves	77
5.2 Against the Argument from Marginal Cases	79
5.3 Atemporal Creatures	86
5.4 What Is Moral Standing Anyway?	93

6. Kant against the Animals, Part 1: The Indirect Duty View	97
6.1 Animals as Mere Means	97
6.2 How Kant Thinks We Ought to Treat Animals	99
6.3 An Incoherent Attitude	102
6.4 The Problem of the Moral Filter	105
6.5 Desert and the Worthiness to Be Happy	109
6.6 Treated Like Animals	112
7. Kant against the Animals, Part 2: Reciprocity and the Grounds of Obligation	115
7.1 Introduction	115
7.2 Reciprocity Arguments	116
7.3 Kant's Account of Moral Choice	118
7.4 Kant on Reciprocal Legislation	123
7.5 The Universalization Test and the Treatment of Animals	126
8. A Kantian Case for Our Obligations to the Other Animals	131
8.1 Introduction	131
8.2 Kant's Copernican Revolution	132
8.3 The Concept of an End in Itself	135
8.4 Valuing Ourselves as Ends in Ourselves	137
8.5 Valuing Animals as Ends in Themselves	141
8.6 Morality as Our Way of Being Animals	146
8.7 Different Moral Relations to People and Animals	146
8.8 Trouble in the Kingdom of Ends	150
9. The Role of Pleasure and Pain	156
9.1 Rapprochement with Utilitarianism?	156
9.2 Aggregation and Its Implications	157
9.3 The Nature of Pleasure and Pain	160
9.4 The Place of Pleasure and Pain in the Final Good	162
9.5 Matters of Life and Death	166
9.6 Kantian Naturalism	167
Part III. Consequences
10. The Animal Antinomy, Part 1: Creation Ethics	173
10.1 Eliminating Predation	173
10.2 Abolitionism	175
10.3 The Animal Antinomy	180
10.4 Creation Ethics	182
10.5 Individuals, Groups, and Species	188
11. Species, Communities, and Habitat Loss	191
11.1 The Value of Species	191
11.2 The Good of a Species and the Good of Its Members	194
11.3 What Is a Species?	196

11.4 Does a Species Have a Good?	198
11.5 Species as Generic Organisms	201
11.6 How to Care about Species	204
11.7 Eliminating Predation Again	208
11.8 Restoring Habitat	209
11.9 Should Humans Go Extinct?	211
12. The Animal Antinomy, Part 2: Abolition and Apartheid	215
12.1 Reorganizing Nature	215
12.2 How to Treat Animals as Ends in Themselves	219
12.3 Eating Animals	220
12.4 Working Animals and Animals in the Military	226
12.5 The Use of Animals in Scientific Experiments	228
12.6 Companion Animals	233
Bibliography	239
Index	247