The people of Israel are living in days of increasing ideological dispute. The debates are serious many of them surround questions of life and death. How fortunate are we that among us is a wise, experienced elder of our tribe, Dr. Yosef Mazur, who, as part of his post-doctorate work, has cut new and daring paths of investigation through the glacier-like assembly of our nation's core values. Dr. Mazur has reached a series of noteworthy and striking findings while uncovering the many dangers post-Zionism poses to the Jewish State.

If only his findings were to receive the attention they so rightly deserve, they would contribute significantly to the quality and substance of the argument and to the general level of debate among us.

The post-Zionist debate has many facets. Mazur's great contribution is in his collecting of all the varied opinions; the political, diplomatic, social, economic and ideological, into an easy-to-follow anthology of writings, pro and con, that sheds a collective light on the issues from all sides.

Mazur does not suffice with quoting others, but contributes to their understanding by placing them opposite each other, allowing them to compete for the reader's attention, mind and heart. Mazur touches not only upon the post-Zionist issue as it stands, but makes it deal with Realpolitik,

Richard Israeli is a Professor of Islamic, Middle Eastern and Chinese History at Hebrew University in Jerusalem, the author of 15 books and some 80 scholarly studies in those domains, and a member of the Steering Committee of the Arab Center for Policy Research. His work in Hebrew, French and English frequently appears in leading international publications.
