

Contents

Preface

SECTION I:

Survey

1 Definitions and background

Syntax, semantics, and pragmatics 4

Regularity 4

The pragmatics wastebasket 6

2 Deixis and distance

Person deixis 10

Spatial deixis 12

Temporal deixis 14

Deixis and grammar 15

3 Reference and inference

Referential and attributive uses 18

Names and referents 19

The role of co-text 21

Anaphoric reference 22

4 Presupposition and entailment

Presupposition 26

Types of presupposition 27

The projection problem 30

Ordered entailments 33

5 Cooperation and implicature

The cooperative principle 36

Hedges 38

Conversational implicature	40
Generalized conversational implicatures	40
Scalar implicatures	41
Particularized conversational implicatures	42
Properties of conversational implicatures	44
Conventional implicatures	45
6 Speech acts and events
Speech acts	48
IFIDs	49
Felicity conditions	50
The performative hypothesis	51
Speech act classification	53
Direct and indirect speech acts	54
Speech events	56
7 Politeness and interaction
Politeness	60
Face wants	61
Negative and positive face	61
Self and other: say nothing	62
Say something: off and on record	63
Positive and negative politeness	64
Strategies	65
Pre-sequences	67
8 Conversation and preference structure
Conversation analysis	71
Pauses, overlaps, and backchannels	72
Conversational style	76
Adjacency pairs	76
Preference structure	78
9 Discourse and culture
Discourse analysis	83
Coherence	84
Background knowledge	85
Cultural schemata	87
Cross-cultural pragmatics	87

SECTION 2
Readings	91
SECTION 3
References	117
SECTION 4
Glossary	127

PURPOSE

What justification might there be for a series of introductions to language study? After all, linguistics is already well served with introductory texts: expositions and explanations which are comprehensive and authoritative and excellent in their way. Generally speaking, however, their way is the essentially academic one of providing a detailed initiation into the discipline of linguistics, and they tend to be lengthy and technical, appropriately so, given their purpose. But they can be quite daunting to the novice. There is also a need for a more general and gradual introduction to language: transitional texts which will ease people into an understanding of complex ideas. This series of introductions is designed to serve this need.

Their purpose, therefore, is not to supplant but to support the more academically oriented introductions to linguistics: to prepare the conceptual ground. They are based on the belief that it is an advantage to have a broad map of the terrain sketched out before one considers its more specific features on a smaller scale, a general context in reference to which the detail makes sense. It is sometimes the case that students are introduced to detail without it being made clear what it is a detail of. Clearly, a general understanding of ideas is not sufficient: there needs to be closer scrutiny. But equally, close scrutiny can be myopic and meaningless unless it is related to the larger view. Indeed, it can be said that the precondition of noble particular enquiry is an awareness of what, in general, the particulars are about. This series is designed to provide this large-scale view of different areas of language study. As such it can serve as a preliminary to (and precondition for) the