

Contents

Acknowledgments

x

- 1 Selectivity in recalling the Soviet past in Uzbekistan:
re-collecting, reflecting and re-imagining 1
 - Sampling method and respondents* 7
 - Interviewing* 9
 - Narrating the memory* 10
 - Challenges, limitations and biases* 13
 - Synopsis and chapter headings* 16

- 2 Power, social life and public memory in Uzbekistan 20
 - History recreated and re-interpreted* 21
 - “Licensing” historical symbols* 23
 - Creation of Soviet man: Soviet cosmopolitanism vs. purity of ethnicity* 24
 - Stance on religion* 26
 - Leaders and time* 31
 - Decision-making and public participation* 33
 - Conclusion* 35

- 3 Recollections of trauma and public responses to the political violence of state policies in the Stalinist era in Uzbekistan 38
 - Stalinist policy perspectives* 39
 - The traumas of collectivization* 43
 - Political repression and the general public* 50
 - Trauma and political structure* 57
 - Conclusion* 61

- 4 The impact of World War II/the Great Patriotic War in Uzbekistan 63
- The participation of Uzbekistan in World War II* 64
- Everyday life during the war* 72
- Postwar reconstruction* 77
- Conclusion* 80
- 5 The death of Stalin: time of despair and hope 82
- News of the death of Stalin* 83
- Hysteria and the shock* 84
- Confusion* 86
- Relief of people* 89
- Conclusion* 91
- 6 Post-Soviet nostalgia in Uzbekistan 93
- Operationalizing post-Soviet nostalgia and memory in the Central Asian domain* 94
- Soviet model of modernization* 97
- Soviet model of a “free” society* 104
- Communist party paternalism and public order* 107
- Stable lifestyles and socialist “democracy”* 110
- Conclusion* 114
- 7 Hybrid ethnic identities in Soviet Uzbekistan 118
- Memories of the Soviet times and the periphery of the USSR in regard to ethnic issues* 120
- Ethnicity and language policy in Soviet Uzbekistan and Soviet nation-building* 122
- A “Russi” social stratum recollected* 126
- Inter-ethnic marriages and inter-ethnic “drawing together” (sblizhenie)* 131
- Hostility toward “Russianization”* 135
- Between russophobes and russophiles* 138
- Conclusion* 140
- 8 Religiosity and Soviet “modernization” in Central Asia: locating religious traditions and rituals in recollections of antireligious policies in Uzbekistan 145
- The re-imagination of religion in post-Soviet memory* 147
- Moving away from a simple dichotomy* 149
- What the narratives of the respondents reveal* 152
- Conclusion* 172

9 Soviet hybridity and communal life: the changing nature of mahalla identity in Uzbekistan	176
Placing the mahalla between public and private life	177
Recollections of the mahalla community in the Soviet system of administration	182
Nostalgia about the Soviet-era community	186
Human relations in the mahalla during the Soviet era	187
The community after the collapse of the Soviet State	195
Conclusion	203
Index	208