

Table of Contents

Acknowledgements	11
Note on transliteration, translation, and names	13
Preface	17
Clearing the ground
Introduction: the obscure presence of Russian Koreans in
Northeast Asia	23
Displacement and mobility	25
Encounters	32
'Wounded attachment'	34
Russian Koreans and Soviet disengagement from the Asia-Pacific frontier	37
Unity and diversity	40
Fieldwork and outline of chapters	43
1 The history of 'the Korean question' and border-making in the Russian Far East	47
An early crossing: the flight from hunger	50
The formation of a border and the beginning of regulation (1884-1904)	58
The Korean question and the 'yellow peril'	63
Internal diversification of Korean settlers and the anti-Japanese movement	65
Building Soviet socialism and cleansing the Soviet Far East	66
Memory in silence in the present	75
2 Repatriating to the Russian Far East, confronting the transition	81
Early repatriates: returnees from Central Asia in the 1950s	85
Newcomer Koreans in the early 1990s: 'organized' migration in chaos	91
From migrants to traders in the mid-1990s	97
Late newcomers and problems with documents	101
The notion of 'locality' for newcomer and old resident Koreans	106

3 Living Soviet socialism the Korean way: mobile agriculture at the border of socialism	115
Rice cultivation: socialist peasants in Soviet Central Asia	118
Work vnye ('outside') the system: gobonjil during Soviet times	123
Nomadic socialist peasants in the lacunae of Soviet socialism	125
Trading cultivators or cultivating traders: trading political status with economic wealth	128
One's own people in/outside the Soviet system	135
Living on the border of Soviet socialism	137
4 Greenhouse society: the subsistence economy and house-holding	139
The economic conditions for greenhouse cultivation	142
Greenhouse construction and the preparation of young plants indoors	152
The greenhouse as threshold	153
The greenhouse in gendered terms	158
The extended space of the house	161
Food: everyday meals and ceremonial banquets	164
The transformation of women in the continuity and extension of the house	171
Becoming persons	175
5 Recalling history: Koreiskii Dom, transnational connections, and diaspora politics	179
Koreiskii Dom as a stage for diasporic politics	182
Leadership change and its implications	185
Different visions for a Russian Korean collective identity	188
Epilogue	205
Appendix 1	211
Appendix 2	213
Glossary	215
Bibliography	221
Index	233