1 Introduction	1
Heather Newell, Máire Noonan, Glyne Piggott, and Lisa deMena Travis
1.1 What is a word?	1
1.2 Approaches to word formation within a syntactic framework	3
1.3 A typology of word formation approaches	5
1.4 The chapters	8
1.5 Conclusion	16
1.6 Some outstanding questions	17
2 Nested phase interpretation and the PIC	20
Heather Newell
2.1 Against the PIC	20
2.1.1 Phase domains	21
2.1.2 PIC evidence	23
2.2 Evidence against the PIC	24
2.2.1 Late Adjunction	25
2.2.2 Agree and Move	25
2.2.3 Post-spell-out movement	27
2.3 Implications of the elimination of the PIC for the PF branch	30
2.3.1 Late Adjunction revisited	31
2.3.2 Lower-copy spell-out	33
2.4 Pure phonology and the PIC	34
2.4.1 Phonosyntactic mismatches in Ojibwe	35
2.4.2 Infixation	37
2.4.3 Phonological conclusions	38
2.5 Conclusion	39
3 Wordhood and word-internal domains	41
Glyne Piggott and Lisa deMena Travis
3.1 Introduction	41
3.2 Spell-out and head movement	42
3.2.1 Background	42
3.2.2 Post-spell-out head movement: Malagasy	44

3.2.3	Phases and inalienable DPs	49
3.2.4	Phases and floated quantifiers	52
3.2.5	Phases and cyclicity	53
3.2.5.1	Internal Merge of heads	55
3.2.5.2	External Merge of heads	55
3.2.5.3	Merge of two heads with no projection	57
3.2.6	Wordhood and the nature of words	58
3.3	Reconciling some syntax–phonology mismatches	60
3.3.1	Introduction of PF movement	60
3.3.2	PF movement in Maybrat	62
3.3.3	PF movement in Mangap-Mbula	67
3.3.4	PF movement in Ojibwe	69
3.4	Conclusion	72
4	Syntactic domain types and PF effects	74
	Bethany Lochbihler
4.1	Introduction	74
4.2	Syntactic phases	75
4.3	Phonological evidence for phases in Ojibwe	79
4.3.1	Intermediate/word-internal phases	80
4.3.1.1	Footing and secondary stress assignment	80
4.3.1.2	Vowel hiatus resolution	81
4.3.2	Final phases	83
4.3.2.1	Independent prosodic word boundaries	83
4.3.2.2	Main stress assignment	85
4.4	Apocope and T-Palatalization: An ordering paradox	86
4.4.1	Apocope and T-Palatalization	87
4.4.2	Animate intransitive verb -i (T-Pal>FLVD)	89
4.4.3	Participle -i (FLVD>T-Pal)	92
4.4.4	Derivation of participle clauses	96
4.5	Conclusion	99
5	Exceptions to the Mirror Principle and morphophonological ‘action at a distance’: The role of ‘word’-internal phrasal movement and spell-out	100
	Neil Myler
5.1	Introduction	100
5.2	Calculating depth of embedding and temporal order of Vocabulary Insertion	101
5.3	Case studies	104
5.3.1	Spirantization in Nyakusa	104

5.3.2	Optionality in Ndebele reduplication and the order of Vocabulary Insertion	110
5.3.2.1	Ndebele reduplication: An introduction	110
5.3.2.2	The interaction between reduplication and affix order in Ndebele	115
5.3.3	Sanskrit: Prefixal particles, the past tense augment, and ruki at a distance	118
5.3.4	Conclusion to section 5.3	120
5.4	Phonological wordhood: On squishing, head-banging, and glomming	120
5.5	Conclusion	124
6	Quantitative component interaction: Data from Tagalog nasal substitution	126
	Kie Zuraw
6.1	Introduction: Quantitative component interaction	126
6.2	Tagalog nasal substitution background	126
6.3	Morphological differences	128
6.3.1	Distinctions among maŋ-X verbs	128
6.3.2	Possible mechanisms	131
6.3.3	What kind of variation?	132
6.3.4	paŋ-RED-X gerunds	133
6.3.5	maŋ-RED-X nominals	134
6.3.6	paŋ-X adjectives, reservational vs instrumental	135
6.3.7	paŋ-X nominalizations	137
6.3.8	paŋ-X verbs	138
6.4	Conclusion	139
7	Suppletion is local: Evidence from Hiaki	141
	Jonathan David Bobaljik and Heidi Harley
7.1	Introduction	141
7.2	Hiaki suppletive verbs	144
7.2.1	Suppletion and structure	145
7.2.2	Locality refined	149
7.3	Beyond Hiaki	151
7.4	Suppletion and agreement	155
7.5	Conclusion	158
8	The paradoxes of Měbengokre's analytic causative	160
	Andrés Pablo Salanova
8.1	Introduction	160
8.2	A brief overview of Měbengokre morphosyntax	161

8.3	o= as a postposition	168
8.4	An analysis involving verb serialization	175
8.5	The analysis of true causatives	177
8.6	Conclusions and further questions	180
	Appendix 8.A o= as an applicative	182
9	ein is ein and that is that : A note on anti-homophony and metamorphology	185
	Thomas Leu
9.1	Introduction	185
9.2	Metamorphology	186
9.3	That is that	192
9.4	Ein is ein	195
9.4.1	Article and numeral ein	195
9.4.2	N- ein and n- on	197
9.4.3	M- ein and m- on	201
9.4.4	Pronominal ein and on	202
9.4.5	A note on French verbal inflection / õ /	204
9.4.6	Overt and non-overt ein	205
9.5	Some consequences and concerns	206
10	Dutch and German R-pronouns and P-stranding: R you sure it's P-stranding?	209
	Máire Noonan
10.1	Introduction	209
10.1.1	Syntax all the way up and down	209
10.1.2	The data: R-pronouns and P-stranding	210
10.1.3	The data: Place adpositions	213
10.2	r- in Dutch versus r- in German	215
10.3	The shadow construction: First pass	218
10.4	Deconstructing R-pronouns and shadow-Ps	221
10.4.1	R-pronoun stranding in Dutch and CG PPs	225
10.4.2	Formal German locational PPs	227
10.4.3	'P-stranding' analysed as R-pronoun stranding	228
10.4.4	Further properties of the shadow construction in CG	229
10.5	Directional PPs in German and CG	233
10.5.1	Formal German directional PPs	233
10.5.2	'P-stranding' in FG directional PPs	235
10.5.3	Colloquial German directional PPs	236
10.6	Conclusion	238

11	Adjunction of complex heads inside words: A reply to Piggott and Travis (2013)	240
	Éric Mathieu, Brandon J. Fry, and Michael Barrie
11.1	Introduction	240
11.2	Adjunction of complex heads inside a word	242
11.3	Theoretical problems	246
11.4	Empirical problems	249
11.5	The alternative: Phrasal Merge	254
11.6	Conclusion	260
12	Verb stem formation and event composition in Oji-Cree	261
	Tanya Slavin
12.1	The Oji-Cree verb stem and the problem of the left-edge requirement	261
12.1.1	The left-edge requirement	262
12.2	Event composition in the literature	264
12.3	Proposal	266
12.4	Evidence for event composition	268
12.4.1	Speaker-oriented preverbs	269
12.4.2	Sentence-level preverbs	270
12.4.3	Aspectual preverbs	271
12.4.3.1	nihtaa-	271
12.4.3.2	kiiwe-	273
12.4.3.3	maacii-	274
12.4.3.4	pooni-	279
12.4.4	Agent-oriented preverbs	282
12.4.5	pi-	285
12.4.6	Restrictions on relative preverbs	287
12.4.6.1	Onci-	288
12.4.6.2	Ishi-	290
12.4.7	Quantifier caaki- ‘all’	293
12.4.8	Summary: The LER and event composition	295
12.5	Conclusion	296
13	Adjuncts as a diagnostic of polysynthetic word formation in Inuit	297
	Richard Compton
13.1	Introduction	297
13.2	Background	300
13.3	Inuit adverbs	302
13.3.1	Evidence for a category of adverbs	302

13.3.2 Adverb ordering in word formation	306
13.3.3 Phrasal adverbs within a fixed hierarchy	310
13.3.4 Right-headedness within a fixed hierarchy	311
13.4 'Suffixal' adverbs without a hierarchy	314
13.4.1 An unresolved issue involving scope	318
13.5 Conclusion	319
