

Contents

The contributors, x
Acknowledgements, xix

Introduction, 1
Amy Downes and Stewart Lansley, UK

Part I: The case for

1. As artificial intelligence and robotics advance,
a basic income may be the only viable solution, 13
Martin Ford, USA

2. Could a universal basic income become the basis for working better in a fast-changing world? 18
Eduardo Rodriguez-Montemayor, INSEAD, France

3. An economic shock absorber, 24
Chris Oestereich, USA

4. Questioning the 'natural order', 31
Brian Eno, UK

5. To keep music alive, 36
Toby Deller, UK

6. Feminist reflections on basic income, 39
Ursula Barry, Ireland

7. Women, motherhood and care, 45
Vanessa Olorenshaw, UK

8. My own private basic income, 48
Karl Widerquist, USA

9. Coming off the fence on universal basic income, 54

Ruth Lister CBE, UK

Part II: Towards tomorrow's society

10. A new politics, 59

Anthony Painter, Royal Society of Arts, UK

11. Universal basic income for the post-industrial age, 61

Roope Mokka and Katariina Rantanen, Demos Helsinki, Finland

12. A down payment on a new, cooperative economy, 68

Avi Lewis and Katie McKenna, The Leap Manifesto, Canada

13. Basic income: a solution to which challenge? 73

Brenton Caffin, Nesta, UK

14. What we talk about when we talk about work, 77

Olivia Hanks, Norwich Radical, UK

15. It's time to stop tinkering, 82

Jonathan Bartley and Caroline Lucas MP, Green Party, UK

16. How I learnt to stop worrying and love basic income, 87

Jonathan Reynolds MP, Labour, UK

17. Trust trumps control, 91

Uffe Elbæk, Alternativet, Denmark

Part III: Dissenting voices

18. Why basic income can never be a progressive solution, 97

Francine Mestrum, Belgium

19. Basic income: a powerful tax engine pulling a tiny cart, 101

Ian Gough, UK

20. A basic income and the democratisation of social policy, 103

Peter Beresford OBE, UK

21. Why a basic income is not good enough, 109

Ed Whitfield, USA

22. Unconditional basic income is a dead end, 113

Anke Hassel, Germany

Part IV: Building for change

23. Basic income and social democracy, 118

Philippe Van Parijs, Belgium

24. History and the contemporary debate in the UK, 123

Malcolm Torry, Citizen's Basic Income Trust, UK

25. Basic income and the democratisation of development in Europe, 128

Louise Haagh, UK

26, part I: The Indian experience:

The debt trap and unconditional basic income, 136

Sarath Davala, India

26, part II: The Indian experience:

The impact of universal basic income on women and girls, 141

Soumya Kapoor Mehta, India

27. A Scottish pilot, 145

Annie Miller, Scotland

28. The libertarian case for universal basic income, 150

Matt Zwolinski, USA

29. For us all: redesigning social security for the 2020s, 155

Andrew Harrop, Fabian Society, UK

30. Making universal basic income work:
the incremental approach, 159

Stewart Lansley and Howard Reed, UK

Part V: The year of the trials

31. An earthquake in Finland, 165

Otto Lehto, Finland

32. Growing a movement: the Canadian context, 171

Roderick Benns and Jenna van Draanen, Canada

33. The post social democratic pathway for the 21st century:
the Dutch example, 176

Alexander de Roo, The Netherlands

34. The California experiment, 181

Elizabeth Rhodes, Y Combinator Research, USA

35. 'Eight': the Ugandan pilot, 185

Steven Janssens, Eight, Belgium

36. The Kenyan experiment, 189

GiveDirectly, Kenya

37. Brazil: a basic income experiment as a citizen-to-citizen project, 193

Bruna Augusto and
Marcus Brancaglione, Brazil

Part VI: The way forward

38. Building momentum, 200

Amy Downes and Stewart Lansley, UK

Notes, 205

Index, 217