

Contents

Lists of maps, tables and boxes	v
About the authors	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Preface	xi
Section I: Context
one Setting the scene and defining the problem	3
Setting the scene	3
Promoting sustainable mobility in Britain	7
Academic perspectives	11
Conclusions	15
two Where have we come from? The historical context	17
How did we travel in the past and what has changed?	17
The changing role of the bicycle in Britain	20
The historical dominance and persistence of walking	24
Conclusions: issues of path dependency	30
three The global context: how is Britain different from other places?	33
Urban travel outside the UK	33
Places where walking is normal	37
Places where cycling is normal	42
Conclusions: Britain in a global context	45
Section II: The research
four Researching walking and cycling	51
The UWAC approach: introduction to the data	51
The case study communities	56
The limitations: what the research cannot be used to show	63
five How the built environment influences walking and cycling	67
Context: the built environment and sustainable travel	67
The connectivity of the street network and access to facilities	68
Spatial analysis of travel and transport: principles and problems	70
Evaluating associations between street network connectivity, access to everyday activities and walking and cycling	72
Conclusions and evaluation	83
six What do people think about everyday travel in urban areas?	85
Introduction	85
What do people say about how they travel?	85
What do people say about how they would like to travel?	90

	How do people feel and relate to travel?	93
	Conclusions	95
seven	The place of walking in the urban environment	97
	Why people walk	97
	How people walk	108
	The barriers to walking	115
	Conclusions: building walking cultures	126
eight	The role of cycling in the urban environment	129
	Why people cycle	129
	How people cycle	137
	The barriers to cycling	142
	Conclusions: building cycling cultures	150
Section III: Policy Perspectives
nine	The future of walking and cycling in British urban areas	155
	Strategies for making walking normal	155
	Strategies for making cycling normal	160
	Making it all happen: issues of implementation	166
ten	Conclusions: issues of society, economy and sustainability	171
	Connecting walking and cycling to wider society	171
	What is working now?	171
	What are the risks of doing nothing?	174
	What could be done?	175
	Concluding comments	178
References		181
	Websites	201
Index		205