

Contents

|  |    |
|--|----|
| Zhou (1075–256 B.C.), Spring and Autumn (770–476 B.C.), and the Warring States (475–221 B.C.) Period . . . . .   | 47 |
| Preface . . . . .  | 5  |
| Part I Music Through Time: a Historical Survey . . . . .  | 9  |
| 1 Musical and Cultural Traits of Chinese Music . . . . .   | 11 |
| 1.1 On the Ideograph Yue – “Music” . . . . .   | 11 |
| 1.2 Historical Patterns and Periodization . . . . .  | 12 |
| 1.3 Musical Creativity . . . . .   | 13 |
| 1.4 Programmatic Music Predominance . . . . .  | 17 |
| 1.5 Musical Functions on a Social and Political Level . . . . .  | 18 |
| 1.6 Gentry Versus Professional Musician . . . . .  | 19 |
| 1.7 Regional Music Predominance . . . . .  | 20 |
| 1.8 The Performer as Composer . . . . .  | 21 |
| 1.9 Polychronicism . . . . .   | 22 |
| 1.10 Multiplicity of Musical Temperament . . . . .   | 22 |
| 1.11 The Sonic Profile . . . . .   | 23 |
| 1.12 Timbral Characterization . . . . .  | 24 |
| 1.13 The Rhythmic Structure . . . . .  | 25 |
| 1.14 Economy and Simplicity . . . . .  | 26 |
| 1.15 Sinicism and Assimilation . . . . .   | 28 |
| 2 Legendary Period and the Xia Dynasty(ca. 27th–16th Centuries B.C.) . . . . .   | 34 |
| 2.1 General Introduction . . . . .   | 34 |
| 2.2 Music of Fuxi, Nüwa, Shennong, Huangdi, Yao and Shun . . . . .   | 35 |
| 2.3 Music in the Xia Dynasty (ca. 21st–16th Centuries B.C.) . . . . .  | 40 |
| 2.4 Pre-Shang Dynasty Musical Artifacts . . . . .  | 43 |
| 3 Shang (ca. 16th–11th Centuries B.C.), Zhou (1075–256 B.C.),Spring and Autumn (770–476 B.C.), and the Warring States(475–221 B.C.) Period . . . . . | 47 |

|      |  |    |
|------|--|----|
| 3.1  | General Introduction . . . . .   | 47 |
| 3.2  | Oracle Bone Inscriptions and Music in the Shang Dynasty  | 48 |
| 3.3  | Shang Rain Dance and Shamannesses . . . . .  | 49 |
| 3.4  | Shang Dynasty Ancestral Ceremonial Musical Dance:the Huo and Shanglin . . . . .                            | 50 |
| 3.5  | Archaeology of Shang Dynasty Musical Instruments . .   | 51 |
| 3.6  | Socio-Historical Background of Zhou Through WarringStates Period . . . . .                                 | 52 |
| 3.7  | Official and Ceremonial Music and Dance of the ZhouThrough Warring States Period . . . . .                 | 55 |
| 3.8  | Music for Banquets, Archery Ceremonies, and Processionsin the Zhou Through Warring States Period . . . . . | 59 |
| 3.9  | Music Education in the Zhou Through Warring StatesPeriod . . . . .   | 61 |
| 3.10 | Theoretical Concepts of Pitch and Scale System(Zhou-Warring States Period) . . . . .                       | 63 |
| 3.11 | The Instruments (Zhou-Warring States Period) . . . . .   | 67 |
| 3.12 | Archaeological Findings of Instruments of theZhou Through Warring States Period . . . . .                  | 70 |
| 4    | Qin (221–207 B.C.) and Han Dynasties (206 B.C.–A.D. 220) .   | 76 |
| 4.1  | Socio-Historical Background . . . . .  | 76 |
| 4.2  | The Imperial Court Music Organization: Yuefu . . . . .   | 78 |
| 4.3  | Rise of Urban Music: Xianghege . . . . .   | 79 |
| 4.4  | Band Music: Guchui “Drum and Wind Instruments”and Hengchui “Transverse Wind Instruments” . . . . .         | 80 |
| 4.5  | Musical Instruments and Tonal Systems . . . . .  | 82 |
| 5    | Three Kingdoms (220–265), Jin (265–420), and theNorthern-Southern Dynasties (420–589) Period . . . . .     | 86 |
| 5.1  | Socio-Historical Background . . . . .  | 86 |
| 5.2  | Importation and Assimilation of Non-Indigenous Music   | 88 |
| 5.3  | Han Chinese Musical Style Preserved in Southern China  | 89 |
| 5.4  | New Instruments, Solo Performance and the EarliestSurviving Notation . . . . .                             | 90 |
| 5.5  | The Aesthetic Principle of Xi Kang: “Sound (Music)Expresses Neither Sadness nor Happiness” . . . . .       | 93 |
| 5.6  | Calculating New Tonal Systems and ApproachingEqual Temperament . . . . .                                   | 94 |

|      |   |     |
|------|---|-----|
| 6    | Sui (581–618), Tang (618–907), and Five Dynasties (907–960) . . . . .   | 96  |
| 6.1  | Socio-Historical Background . . . . .   | 96  |
| 6.2  | The Yanyue Court “Banquet Music” . . . . .  | 98  |
| 6.3  | The Daqu Musical Form of Court Banquet Music . . . . .  | 100 |
| 6.4  | The Quzi “Short Song” . . . . .   | 102 |
| 6.5  | The Bianwen Early Narrative Music . . . . .   | 103 |
| 6.6  | Institutions of Performing Arts . . . . .   | 104 |
| 6.7  | The Tang Dramatic Play . . . . .  | 106 |
| 6.8  | Non-Indigenous Instruments and Refinementof Native Instruments . . . . .                                  | 107 |
| 6.9  | Tang Music Through Manuscript Notation . . . . .  | 107 |
| 6.10 | The New Modal Theory . . . . .  | 111 |
| 7    | Music of the Northern Song (960–1127), Southern Song(1127–1279), and Yuan (1271–1368) Dynasties . . . . . | 114 |
| 7.1  | Socio-Historical Background . . . . .   | 114 |
| 7.2  | The Ci Song . . . . .   | 116 |
| 7.3  | The Art Songs . . . . .   | 118 |
| 7.4  | The Narrative Songs . . . . .   | 120 |
| 7.5  | The Zaju “Variety Musical Drama” . . . . .  | 120 |
| 8    | Ming (1368–1644) and Qing (1644–1911) Dynasties . . . . .   | 127 |
| 8.1  | Socio-Historical Background . . . . .   | 127 |
| 8.2  | Musical Highlights . . . . .  | 130 |
| 9    | The Republic Period (1912–present) . . . . .  | 135 |
| 9.1  | Socio-Historical Background . . . . .   | 135 |
| 9.2  | Musical Highlights . . . . .  | 136 |
| 9.3  | Music from 1912–1949 . . . . .  | 136 |
| 9.4  | Xuetang Public School Music . . . . .   | 138 |
| 9.5  | The Mingge Folksongs . . . . .  | 139 |
| 9.6  | Narrative Songs . . . . .   | 144 |
| 9.7  | Instrumental Music . . . . .  | 148 |
| 9.8  | Music from 1949–1976 . . . . .  | 153 |
| 9.9  | The Eight Yangban Model Plays . . . . .   | 157 |
| 9.10 | Music from 1976 to the 1980’s . . . . .   | 159 |
| 9.11 | Music in Taiwan (1949–1980’s) . . . . .   | 162 |

|         |   |     |
|---------|---|-----|
| Part II | Content and Context of Chinese Music . . . . .                              | 167 |
| 10      | A Psycho-Aesthetic Approach to Interpretationin Chinese Music . . . . . | 169 |
| 10.1    | The Contemplation of “Inner Substance” . . . . .                            | 171 |
| 10.2    | Harmony/Soundless Sounds . . . . .  | 172 |
| 10.3    | Composing and Listening . . . . .   | 174 |
| 10.4    | Intuition and Imagination . . . . .   | 176 |
| 10.5    | Music Symbolism . . . . .   | 177 |
| 10.6    | Objective Symbolism . . . . .   | 177 |
| 10.7    | Subjective Symbolism . . . . .  | 180 |
| 11      | The Succession of Music: Oral and Written Transmission . . . . .            | 185 |
| 11.1    | Oral Transmission . . . . .   | 185 |
| 11.2    | Written Transmission . . . . .  | 186 |
| 11.3    | Pitched Notation . . . . .  | 187 |
| 11.4    | Regional Gongchepu . . . . .  | 188 |
| 11.5    | Nanzhipu . . . . .  | 189 |
| 11.6    | Mingqing Gongche Type . . . . .   | 190 |
| 11.7    | Lülüpu, Gongshangpu, Ersipu . . . . .                                       | 193 |
| 11.8    | Graphic Notation . . . . .  | 194 |
| 12      | The Art of the Qin . . . . .  | 197 |
| 12.1    | Scholarship in Notation . . . . .   | 200 |
| 12.2    | The Unique Timbre of the Qin . . . . .                                      | 203 |
| 12.3    | Re-creation in Qin Performance . . . . .                                    | 204 |
| 12.4    | Description and Programmaticism . . . . .                                   | 206 |
| 12.5    | The Cultivation of the “Way of the Qin” – Qindao . . . . .                  | 208 |
| 12.6    | The Volume of the Instrument . . . . .                                      | 209 |
| 13      | Regional Instrumental Music . . . . .                                       | 212 |
| 13.1    | Introduction . . . . .  | 212 |
| 13.2    | Regional Percussion Music . . . . .   | 214 |
| 13.3    | Percussion, String and Wind Ensemble . . . . .                              | 216 |
| 13.4    | Wind and String Ensemble Music . . . . .                                    | 219 |
| 13.5    | The Shifan Qingluogu Style:Instrumental and Formal Structure . . . . .  | 223 |

|       |   |     |
|-------|---|-----|
| 14    | Chinese Traditional Opera .....   | 230 |
| 14.1  | Introduction .....  | 230 |
| 14.2  | The Function of Vocal and Instrumental Music .....                      | 231 |
| 14.3  | Types of Vocal Composition in Chinese Opera .....                       | 233 |
| 14.4  | Quqiang Type of Opera .....   | 234 |
| 14.5  | The Music of Kun Opera .....  | 238 |
| 14.6  | Banqiang Melo-Rhythmic Motivic Type of Opera .....                      | 243 |
| 14.7  | Banqiang Style – The Music of Peking Opera .....                        | 243 |
| 14.8  | The Xipi Melodic/Rhythmic Phraseologyand Stanzaic Structure .....   | 251 |
| 14.9  | The Instrumental Accompaniment of Peking Opera ..                       | 254 |
| 15    | General Characteristicsof Primary Chinese Musical Instruments ..... | 268 |
| 15.1  | Aerophones .....  | 268 |
| 15.2a | Chordophones (Plucked) .....  | 270 |
| 15.2b | Chordophones (Bowed) .....  | 273 |
| 15.2c | Chordophones (Struck) .....   | 275 |
| 15.3  | Idiophones .....  | 275 |
| 15.4  | Membranophones .....  | 278 |
|       | Selected Bibliography and References Cited .....                        | 279 |
|       | Selected Discography .....  | 283 |
|       | Credits (Plates and Photos) .....                                       | 291 |
|       | Index .....   | 293 |

It is my earnest hope that many more have been left out than in the compilation and condensation of the musical heritage of a billion people in this volume. Furthermore, in the research field, the door is far from closed and there is more to be learned as Western scholars are permitted to study at the cultural source. Therefore, let me be the first to say that this book is far from being comprehensive or complete. It represents a preliminary but sincere attempt to understand the musical culture of China—hopefully an attempt that will stimulate other inquiries and further ventures, especially from my senior colleagues. In a Chinese saying that happens to be appropriate to my present circumstances, "Translated freely, it refers to the foot-soldier who does not mind being the catalyst in the charge."