17.	If you don't open with explicit issue statements, sum up the issues and your theme in a short introduction.	132
18.	Highlight the reasons for the conclusion you're urging.	143
19.	Make your points as simple as possible, but never oversimplify.	148
D. Marching Forward Through Sound Paragraphs
20.	Begin each paragraph with a topic sentence. Don't end a paragraph with what should be the next one's topic sentence.	155
21.	Bridge from one paragraph to another.	161
22.	Connect your sentences smoothly from one to another. Avoid "bumps" in the prose.	169
23.	Ease your readers' way by providing signposts.	173
24.	Put all your citations in footnotes, while saying in the text what authority you're relying on. But ban substantive footnotes.	176
25.	If you must cite in text, make the citations unobtrusive.	200
26.	Don't bury your argument in parenthetical case explanations.	207
E. Editing for Brisk, Uncluttered Sentences
27.	Relax the tone: eliminate the jargon known as "legalese."	221
28.	Never write a sentence that you couldn't easily speak.	226
29.	Break up long, complex sentences. Shoot for an average sentence length of 20 words.	231
30.	Avoid tiresome repetitions that cloy the ear and dull the mind.	236
31.	Populate your sentences. Use real names (not procedural labels), settle on one name per party, and dispense with courtesy titles (Mr. , Mrs. , Ms.).	243
32.	Slash unnecessary words.	251
33.	Supplant be -verbs with action verbs.	256
34.	Know what the passive voice is and where it's justified. Minimize it everywhere else.	259
35.	Eliminate zombie nouns—especially words ending in -tion	264
36.	Given the choice between a passive-voice verb and a zombie noun, prefer the passive voice.	269
37.	Eliminate unnecessary prepositional phrases—especially those beginning with of	272
38.	Cut filler phrases such as there is and there are	276
39.	Eliminate throat-clearing phrases.	279
40.	Don't separate a short subject from its verb—or a verb from its object—with a modifying phrase. Try starting the sentence with the modifier.	283
41.	Keep your sentences to one main thought, but combine related sentences if doing so minimizes choppiness.	288
42.	Use grammatically parallel constructions whenever you can—making sure the ideas themselves are also parallel.	291
