

Contents of Volume II

EDITOR'S INTRODUCTION TO VOLUME II xi

PART I THE COMPARATIVE STUDY OF THE CONSTITUTION*

Introduction	3
1 General Characteristics of Existing English Constitutionalism	16
2 Constitutionalism of the Commonwealth	29
3 English Constitutionalism under George III	60
4 American Constitutionalism	75
5 French Constitutionalism (with Appendix, Droit Administratif and Constitution of Year VIII, Art. 75)	89
6 Prussian Constitutionalism	105
7 Party Government	122
8 Parliamentarism	137
9 General Conclusions	151

PART II THE COMPARATIVE STUDY OF CONSTITUTIONS†

Introduction—Nature of Comparative Study of Constitutions (analysis)	169
1 Historical [Constitutions] and Non-Historical Constitutions (analysis and full text)	171
2 Ancient Constitutionalism and Modern Constitutionalism (analysis and full text)	192
3 Representative Government (analysis and full text)	214
4 The Separation of Powers (two analyses)	229
5 Divisions of Constitutions (analysis and full text)	232
6 The Judiciary in Relation to the Executive and Legislative Powers (two analyses)	249
7 Local Government and Centralization (two analyses)	253
8 Federal Government (analysis)	255
9 Federal Government (continued): The Australian Commonwealth (analysis)	257

* Part I's title has been derived from the first page, and the chapter/lecture headings and their sequence have been derived from the second page (headed 'Old forms of Mss Lectures'), of a four-page manuscript entitled 'Comparative Study of the Constitution: List of Papers etc', Dicey Papers, All Souls College, Oxford, Codrington Library, MS 323 (see Editor's Introduction, pp xvii f. below). On that page, the Introduction and chapters 1, 4, 5, 6 and 9 were dated May 1897, chapter 2 was dated June 1897, chapter 3 was not dated, and chapters 7 and 8 were dated July 1898 and August 1898 respectively. Most of the original lecture manuscripts were also dated and, if so, their dates have been footnoted at the start of chapters. These dates are the dates when lecture texts were first written, rewritten, or re-used.

† Part II's title, the chapter/lecture headings (excluding the Introduction), and their sequence have been derived from a manuscript lecture schedule headed 'Easter & Trinity Terms 1900: Comparative Study of Constitutions', Dicey Papers, All Souls College, Oxford, Codrington Library, MS 323 (see Editor's Introduction, pp xvii f. below). In later manuscript notes, the schedule was recorded as a 'New Series', and 'written 1900' was added beneath the titles to chapters/lectures 1, 2, 3, and 5, marking those lectures that had been written out in full. Dates written on the original manuscripts of lecture texts and analyses have been footnoted at the start of chapters.

APPENDIX—COMPARATIVE CONSTITUTIONALISM*

I	Memorandum on English Party System of Government	261
II	Lecture 4: Comparison between English [Executive] and other Executives or Parliamentary and Non-Parliamentary Executives (analysis and full text); Lecture 5: Comparison [between] English Executive [and] other Executives (continued) (analysis and full text)	274
III	Note 2: Self-Government	299
	Note 3: Self-Government and Local Self-Government	302
IV	Modes of Changing or Amending a Constitution (analysis)	303
V	Authorities and Questions for The Comparative Study of Constitutions	305
VI	Note 17: Conclusions as to French Droit Administratif	307
VII	Why Universal Suffrage Suits France (full text)	315
VIII	Scheme of Lectures, 1906	320
IX	Scheme of Lectures, 1908	333
	Index	341

* These materials from the Dicey Papers were not incorporated in the lecture scheme and schedule from which the contents of Parts I and II respectively have been derived. They have been put in chronological order in so far as that order has been ascertained. Dates written on the original manuscripts of Appendix items have been footnoted below. On the selection of items, see Editor's Introduction, pp xix f. below.