Part I. Initial Motivations

1. Introduction: Reasons Responsiveness, the Reasons Program, and Knowledge-First	3
1.1 An Ideological Primer	3
1.1.1 Rationality, what	3
1.1.2 Reasons Responsiveness as a real definition	6
1.1.3 Objective normative reasons, what	7
1.1.4 Possessed normative reasons, what	8
1.1.5 Correctly responding to possessed normative reasons, what	9
1.1.6 The requirements of rationality	10
1.2 The Reasons Program and Knowledge-First	12
1.2.1 The Reasons Program	12
1.2.2 Knowledge-first	14
1.3 The Plan	15
2. The Coherent and the Rational	18
2.1 Introduction	18
2.2 The Debate as it Currently Stands	19
2.3 Broome's Challenge	23
2.4 What about Coherence?	27
2.4.1 Closure	28
2.4.2 Narrowly inconsistent intentions	29
2.4.3 Broadly inconsistent intentions	35
2.4.4 Means-end incoherence	36
2.4.5 Akrasia	45
2.5 Practical Condition Failures, High-Order Defeat, and Rational Incoherence	50
2.5.1 Practical condition failures	51
2.5.2 Higher-order defeat	55
2.6 The Myth of the Coherent	61
2.7 Back to the Beginning	63

Part II. Possessing Reasons

3. What it is to Possess a Reason: The Epistemic Condition	67
3.1 Introduction	67
3.2 A Taxonomy	69
3.3 Against Holding Views	71
3.4 Against Low Bar Views	74
3.5 Against Non-Factive Views	81

3.5.1	For (2)	82
3.5.2	Back to (1)	86
3.6	Against $P \rightarrow \text{TEAR}$	90
3.7	Conclusion	95
4.	What it is to Possess a Reason: The Practical Condition	97
4.1	The Insufficiency of the Epistemic Condition	97
4.2	The Counterexamples: A Diagnosis of What's Going Wrong	100
4.3	Filling the Gap	102
4.3.1	First attempt: missing beliefs(ish)	102
4.3.2	Second attempt: attitudinal orientation towards the right and good	112
4.4	The Practical Condition and Know-How	116
4.4.1	Inferring desires from knowledge	116
4.4.2	Generalizing	121
4.5	Is Possession Composite?	123
Part III. Correctly Responding to Reasons
5.	What it is to Correctly Respond to Reasons	127
5.1	Introduction	127
5.2	Acting for Motivating Reasons, Believing for Motivating Reasons, and Being Deviant	129
5.3	Reacting for Normative Reasons	131
5.4	Reacting for Normative Reasons, Essentially Normative Dispositions, and Know-How	135
5.4.1	Essentially normative dispositions and deviancy	135
5.4.2	Essentially normative dispositions and know-how	139
5.4.3	Why this is, alas, not enough to get all that we want	141
5.5	Further Upshots	143
5.5.1	The relationship between ex post and ex ante rationality	143
5.5.2	Speckled hens and the epistemology of perception	144
5.5.3	The causal efficacy of the normative	145
5.6	Conclusion	147
6.	Achievements and Intelligibility: For Disjunctivism about Reacting for Reasons	149
6.1	Introduction	149
6.2	Reacting for Motivating Reasons and Reacting for Normative Reasons	152
6.2.1	Reacting for motivating reasons	152
6.2.2	Reacting for normative reasons	154
6.3	The Univocal View and the Argument from Illusion	156
6.4	Against the Univocal View	158
6.4.1	Part I: against the Normative Reasons-First view	159
6.4.2	Part II: against the Motivating Reasons-First view	166
6.5	What it is to React for Motivating Reasons	169
6.5.1	Reintroducing deviancy	169

6.5.2	Conceiving of motivating reasons	170
6.5.3	Reacting in virtue of conceiving and deviancy	174
6.6	How Disjunctivist is This?	176
6.7	Conclusion	179
Part IV. Two Problems Solved
7.	Defeating the Externalist's Demons	183
7.1	Introduction	183
7.2	Preliminaries and a Statement of the Problem	185
7.3	A Solution to the New Evil Demon Problem	188
7.4	But Wait, There's More: The New New Evil Demon Problem	198
7.5	Solving the New New Evil Demon Problem	202
7.5.1	The inferential case	204
7.5.2	The non-inferential case	206
7.6	Conclusion (with a Reason to Reject $P \rightarrow K$)	207
8.	What You're Rationally Required to Do and What You Ought to Do (Are the Same Thing!)	209
8.1	Introduction	209
8.2	Why Be Rational?	211
8.2.1	Preliminaries	211
8.2.2	Coherence, rationality, deontic significance	212
8.3	A Better Way: Reasons Responsiveness	217
8.3.1	Initial motivations	217
8.3.2	Reasons responsiveness and deontic significance	221
8.4	Ignorance and Obligation	222
8.4.1	Ignorance and envelopes	223
8.4.2	Ignorance and acting for the right reasons	229
8.5	Summary of Results (Or: Why You Ought to Be Rational)	240
	Bibliography	243
	Index of Cases	255
	Index of Principles & Requirements	257
	General Index	259
