

CONTENTS

Foreword	9
I. The social function of science	11
1.1. The significance of science through the ages	11
1.2. What do we mean by science?	12
1.3. The impulses and the functions of science	13
1.4. The evolution of the social function of science in the antagonisms of class society	15
1.5. The social function and characteristic features of science in the first phases of socialist development	16
1.6. The role and characteristic features of science in a mature socialist society	18
1.7. Science, technology and public life	21
1.8. Socialist scientists and society	23
1.9. The communist view of science	28
II. Scientific and research policy	31
2.1. Basic categories of research assignments	31

2.2. Ensuring that research is effective	35
2.3. Exploiting the results of research in practice	41
III. International co-operation in science	49
3.1. International scientific co-operation and its organization	49
3.2. Forms of international scientific co-operation	50
3.3. Experience in international scientific co-operation between the socialist countries	53
3.4. Relations with capitalist countries, the developing countries, and participation in the work of international scientific organizations	56
IV. The organizational structure of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences	58
4.1. The early years of the Academy	58
4.2. Reorganization	59
4.3. The institutes of the Academy	61
4.4. The Scientific Boards	64
4.5. The Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences and the Slovak Academy of Sciences	65
4.6. The Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences and the Universities	66
4.7. Policy making	68
V. Conclusion. The present state of research and future organizational problems	70
5.1. The existing network of institutes	70
5.2. The general character of achievements to date	72
5.3. The research workers of the Academy	74

5.4. Premises and equipment	75
5.5. Current issues of research policy	76

List of published speeches and articles on Czechoslovak scientific and research policy, 1951 – 1966, by the author	79
---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	-----------

