

Contents

Preface	ix
Introduction	1
The task of a general theory	1
Other models	5
1 A general theory of second language learning	11
Features of a general theory	11
Conditions for second language learning	14
An overview	25
2 Knowing a language	30
Interlanguage	30
Variability	36
Variety of language	41
3 Knowing how to use a language	46
Duality of knowledge and skills	46
Communicative competence	51
The view from theory	56
4 Structures and functions	59
The approach from language testing	59
Testing structural knowledge	60
Testing integrated functions	61
Necessary or imposed order	65
Goals for learning Hebrew—an example	66
5 Measuring knowledge of a second language	71
The idea of general proficiency	71
Relating the models	76
Linguistic outcomes in a general theory	78
6 The psycholinguistic basis	83
The human learner	83
The argument from linguistic theory	89
The relevance of age	91

7	Ability and personality	100
	Individual differences	100
	Intelligence	102
	Aptitude	104
	Learning styles and strategies	108
	Personality	110
	Anxiety in second language learning	113
8	The linguistic basis	117
	Contrastive analysis	117
	Universals and contrastive analysis	121
	Universals and second language learning	124
9	The social context	131
	Social factors	131
	The stylistic dimension	136
	The acculturation model	142
10	Attitudes and motivation	148
	Language learning motivation	148
	The socio-educational model	154
	Attitudes, motivation, and acculturation	157
	Social basis of motivation	160
11	Opportunities for second language learning	166
	Opportunities for learning	166
	Informal and formal learning	170
	Pidginization and creolization	173
	Foreigner talk	178
12	Formal instruction	187
	The nature and effect of input	187
	The value of formal instruction	193
	The approach from teaching	197
13	Testing the model	202
	Testing a preference model	202
	Defining the outcomes	204
	Ability and personality	205
	Anxiety	207
	Attitudes and rationales	207
	The effects of attitudes	209
	Opportunities for learning	211
	A causal model	213

14	The form of a general theory	221
	Choosing a model	221
	Beyond the preference model	225
	Extension of the theory to language loss	228
	Conclusion	229
	Appendix
	Case study: Hebrew in a Jewish school	232
	The case study	232
	The reliability and validity of self-assessment	233
	Tables	235
	Bibliography and citation index	244
	Index	265