

Contents

Abstract	7
Abstrakt	8
Abstrakt	9
1. Social Distance as a Relational Approach to Social Stratification: A Theoretical Introduction (Jiří Šafr)	11
Cultural Approach to Class Analysis	11
The relational paradigm of stratification	14
Social distance: definitions and assumptions	14
Homophily – the principle of differential association	15
Social distance and interaction	15
Subjective social distance in the stratification space	16
Class / status feelings: competitive and corporate consciousness	18
Social Distances in the Stratification System of the Czech Republic project	19
Structure of the book	19
2. Subjective Social Distance: Interaction Willingness and Occupational Stimuli (Julia Häuberer, Jiří Šafr)	21
Data: Social Distance 2007 survey	21
Hierarchy of occupations	22
Does subjective social distance just measure prestige? Social usefulness and social-interactive distance	26
Non-response	27
Do men and women express uniform social distances to occupations?	28
3. Class Differences in Subjective Social Distance in the Czech Republic: Like-me or Prestige Effect? (Julia Häuberer, Jiří Šafr)	31
Testing the 'like-me' principle and the 'prestige effect'	31
Estimating social distance based on the status of target occupations in five social classes	34
Which effect is at work in which social class?	35
Which effect is stronger in Czech society?	36
Social distances in individual level data: what effect prevails for a specific target occupation?	38
Patterns of subjective social distances: different class/status consciousness?	38
Competitive vs. corporate status consciousness/ feelings	39
Conclusion: the prevailing prestige effect in subjective distances	45
4. The Symbolic Space of Professions – Subjectively Experienced Class Boundaries (Jiří Šafr, Julia Häuberer)	46
Means differences of pairs of target occupations among self-identified classes	46
The structure of the similarity of occupations: subjectively experienced class structure	48

Conclusion: the status continuum with indicative evidence of subjectively experienced class structure	54
5. Status Homogeneity and Heterogeneity in Social Contacts (Jiří Šafr)	55
Where do our friends come from? The focused organization of friendship ties	56
The idea of Network 4: the macro-sociological approach to social structure	59
Educational homogeneity/heterogeneity	60
The prestige effect in naming friends?	62
Relative homogeneity (odds ratio) in educational homogeneity	63
Class homogeneity/heterogeneity – ‘friendship between classes’	63
Occupational homogeneity – social distance space	65
Conclusion: patterns of association – enclosed social circles	65
6. Images of Social Classes and Strata (Jiří Šafr)	67
What is social class and what are criteria for class membership?	67
Trait attribution to social strata	71
Images of a social category: the semantic space of stratification groups	71
Inter-class evaluation stereotypes: in-group favouritism and out-group derogation	73
Conclusion: images of classes and strata	75
7. Perception of Social Classes and Class Identification in the Czech Republic (Marta Kolářová)	76
What does the term ‘class’ evoke?	77
The definition of class and the principle of stratification	78
What classes are perceived in Czech society?	79
Class identification	81
Conclusion: the rejection of social class	82
8. Constructing the Group Identity of Ordinary People: Who Are ‘Those Below’ and ‘Those Above?’ (Kateřina Vojtišková)	84
Lay normativity and the construction of group boundaries	84
The ‘ordinary’ majority	86
Constructing symbolic boundaries between ‘ordinary people’ and the others	87
Conclusion: deprecation and a call for recognition	88
9. Conclusion: How Do Czechs See the Structure of Their Society? (Jiří Šafr, Julia Häuberer)	90
References	93
Appendix	96
Summary	99
Shrnutí	101
Zusammenfassung	103
About the Authors	106
Name Index	107
Subject Index	108