

CONTENTS

- 1 Introduction
- 2 Environmental policy in a first-best world
  - 2.1 The command economy
  - 2.2 Pollution taxes in a market economy: A Pigovian view
- 3 Distortions and public goods: Ramsey tax schemes
  - 3.1 Tax structure
  - 3.2 Choice between public and private goods
- 4 Pollution and labour taxes in a second-best world
  - 4.1 Tax structure
  - 4.2 Public consumption: Level and composition
  - 4.3 Public abatement
- 5 Restrictions on preferences
  - 5.1 The utility tree
  - 5.2 The optimality conditions revisited
- 6 Loglinearisation
  - 6.1 Private behaviour
  - 6.2 Equilibrium and the government budget constraint
  - 6.3 Environmental quality
- 7 Optimal government policy revisited
  - 7.1 Environmental policy
  - 7.2 Composition of private and public spending
  - 7.3 Cost of public funds: tax level and tax composition effects
- 8 Shift towards greener preferences
  - 7.1 Labour tax and employment: The double dividend hypothesis
  - 7.2 Public consumption: Are red and green policies compatible?
  - 7.3 Economic costs of an explicit green target
    - 7.3.1 Cleaner economic activity: Choice of instruments
    - 7.3.2 Change in the level of economic activity
- 9 Shift towards redder preferences
  - 9.1 Tax structure and employment
  - 9.2 Public consumption, private welfare and environmental quality
- 10 Concluding remarks
- References
- Appendix
- Table 1: Notation
- Table 2: Compensated and uncompensated demand elasticities
- Table 3: Shift towards greener preferences
- Table 4: Shift towards redder preferences

D 32220

04171/93

KNIHOVNA AV ČR
D 32220

04171/93