

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	xi
1 Crossing the borderline	1
The disembodiedness of everyday life	3
The genesis of othering	5
The attractions of hiatus	7
The vertigo of late modernity	11
Turbo-charged capitalism	14
2 Blurring the binary vision	17
Blurring the boundaries	21
Bulimia: not exclusion but inclusion/exclusion	23
Crossing the borderline: against the dual city thesis	25
The functional underclass	28
The boundaries of bulimia	30
The precariousness of inclusion	34
The focus on the underclass	36
Crime and the narrowing of differences	37
Globalisation and the generation of domestic and global discontent	38
3 The sociology of vindictiveness and the criminology of transgression	41
Fear of falling	44
The change in the focus of reward	45
Towards a criminology of transgression	46
The rise of celebrity	49
Humiliation and rebellion	51
The satisfactions of transgression	53
The humiliation of exclusion	55
Edgework, ontological security and utopia	56
From turf war to real war	57
Hip hop across the borders	58

4	Chaos and the coordinates of order	59
	Class and identity in the twenty-first century	60
	The undermining of the meritocracy	64
	Changes in the perceived class structure	65
	The shift to identity politics	68
	Antecedents of the cultural shift	71
	The war against the poor	73
	The meta-humiliation of poverty	76
5	The decline of work and the invisible servant	78
	The declining centrality of work?	78
	Getting the poor to work: the US experiment	81
	Redemption through labour	82
	Including the excluded	85
	Welfare: from relief to irresponsibility	86
	Early morning in Harlem	87
	The invisible worker	91
	The invisible servant	92
	Entering the zone of humiliation	95
	Service as a feudal relationship	96
	The invisible poor in a classless society	98
	Guilt and middle-class solipsism	99
6	Social inclusion and redemption through labour	100
	New Labour: new inclusionism	104
	The Welfare State: not the solution but the problem	106
	The will to win	107
	Many's the slip 'twixt cup and lip: New Labour's obsessional neurosis	110
	The moral panic over teenage pregnancy	112
	Rationality and the middle classes	118
	The errors of inclusion	119
	From structure to agency: beyond the weak thesis	124
	Social and political exclusion	126
7	Crossing the border: to these wet and windy shores	130
	The social construction of the immigrant	131
	To these wet and windy shores	133
	Two modes of entry	137
	Over 20 years ago: the riots of 1981	139

Crime immigration and the demonisation of the other	140
The roots of othering	141
The final phase: the irony of assimilation	143
The roots of the disturbances	143
The riots in Bradford, Oldham and Burnley	144
Postscript: the riots in France 2005	147
8 Terrorism and anti-terrorism terrorism: the banality of evil	149
Proxy wars and the defeat of the Soviet Union	151
Occidentalism	152
The House of Bush and the House of Saud	154
The two contradictions: inside and outside the First World	154
Symmetry and differences	157
The sasnitisation of evil	158
The beatification of evil	158
The logic of the West	159
The photographs from Abu Grahib	160
Love was all they had to set against them	161
The London bombing and the banality of evil	162
The dialectics of othering and the problem of evil	164
The generation of anger and the frustration of normality	164
The othering of the otherer	165
The summoning up of violence	166
Violence and the metaphor of war	168
Elsewhere: on the D train to Manhattan	173
Urban somnambulism: elsewhere in a Brooklyn deli	174
9 The exclusive community	175
The organic community	176
Othering in the Ardoyne: the holy cross school	179
The turn to the dark side	180
The fallacy of privileging community	181
Enter virtual reality: elsewhere in the east end	183
Stars, celebrities: guiding narratives for a shifting world	184
The Cronus effect and broken narratives	185
The deterritorialisation of community and the rise of the virtual	187
Elsewhere in an elevator: John Jay College, October 2004	188
The rise of multi-media and the uninvited guest	188

From generalised other to generalised elsewhere	189
From community to public sphere	192
The community in late modern times	194
Conclusion: Roads to elsewhere	197
Affirmative and transformative inclusion	198
The politics of redistribution	199
Towards a new politics of inclusion	201
The politics of deconstruction	202
Othering and community	203
The banishment of unreason	204
Rationality, the new media and the public sphere	206
The porous community	209
Hyperpluralism and the elusive other	210
Towards a politics of diversity	212
Bibliography	214
Index	225