

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	xi
1 Introduction	1
'Fred ... you have not spoken for a long time'	1
Sport-for-development: pessimism of the intellect, optimism of the will	3
The sport-for-development impact study	5
Surveys: a neo-colonialist conspiracy?	6
Types of surveys	7
How was it done?	8
Age and development	9
Some reflections on well-meaning ambition	9
The structure of the book	10
Data sets and the Statistical Package for the Social Sciences (SPSS)	15
Statistical testing	16
Testing differences	16
2 Sport-for-development: limited focus programmes and broad gauge problems	18
Is it really new?	18
Displacement of scope	19
Myths, evangelism, conceptual entrepreneurs and incestuous amplification	20
Approaches to sport-for-development	22

Rights or externalities?	25
The United Nations embraces sport, with the exhortation of the evangelists	28
From economic capital to social capital	30
Unequal partners, inflated promises and mission drift	32
Limited focus programmes and broad gauge problems	34
Conclusion: hope is not a plan	36
3 Conceptual entrepreneurs, liberation methodologists and research as a dirty word	38
Politics, ideology and faith: who needs evidence?	38
Admitting the difficulties	41
Liberation methodology and research as a dirty word	45
'It is too scientific'	47
Liberation, standard research practice or good manners?	49
Are researchers simply agents of neo-colonialism?	51
Logic, what logic?	53
Why do you think it works?	55
Conclusion: beyond incestuous amplification	58
4 Self-efficacy beliefs: not so deficient after all?	59
Touching virtually every aspect of people's lives	59
What is perceived self-efficacy?	60
How is perceived self-efficacy developed?	60
Is perceived self-efficacy enough?	63
Measuring perceived self-efficacy	64
Implementation ... nearly	66
'You would not survive three days here'	67
Programme impacts and beyond averages	70
Stating the bleeding obvious?	74
Participants and non-participants: spot the difference	75
Training peer leaders	76
Conclusions	78
Was it sport?	80
5 Self-esteem: best taken in moderation	82
Why self-esteem, why sport?	82
Cultural relevance	85
A social vaccine?	86
Doing well and well-being	88
Measuring self-esteem	89
Social desirability bias	90

- Self-selection and self-esteem* 90
Participants and non-participants: beyond sport 91
Before-and-after surveys 92
Beyond averages 94
Sex-related differences 96
Self-esteem and five sport-for-development programmes: conclusions 97
The contingent nature of impacts: stating the obvious? 98
Perceived self-efficacy and self esteem: doing well and feeling good? 99
The approach and results: contingency again 100
Conclusions 102
- 6 Sport-for-development, peer leaders and HIV and AIDS: a method in search of a theory? 103
- Introduction* 103
Knowledge, informed choice and the irrationality of sex 103
Knowledge, self-efficacy, expressed intention and sex 107
Peer leaders: symbolism, efficiency or effectiveness? 112
Arguments for peer education 113
Peer education: who benefits? 114
Limitations of peer leadership: not all peers are equal 115
Noises from beyond the touch line 119
Gender, culture and the seeming paradox of sport 121
Influencing values and attitudes 123
A minor league player? 124
Conclusions 125
- 7 'There is loads of relationships here': developing a programme theory for sport-for-change programmes 128
- Sufficient conditions and their commonality* 128
From programmes to mechanisms 131
Methods 132
The relative role of sport 134
Recruiting participants 134
The role of sport 135
The social climate: 'There is loads of relationships here' 136
Respect, trust and reciprocity: the key mechanism 137
What if ... ? 138
'Go for your goal an' that!' 139
Volunteering and 'a sense of being needed' 140
Growing up safely 141
Two steps forward ... 142
Sufficient conditions and programme theories 143

A tentative programme theory 144
Reading Figure 7.1 149
Programme notes 150

8 Social capital: a social good or for the social good? 152
Introduction 152
The UN turns to civil society and sport's opportunity 152
Sport-for-development and social capital 155
Which social capital? 156
The Mathare Youth Sport Association 159
Volunteering plus 162
Social capital: motivation and differential distribution 163
Bonding capital and the economy of affection 164
Can we go beyond the touchline? 166
Connected and isolated clubs 168
From ideology to sociology 171

9 Conclusions: hope is not a plan 174
How new is new? 174
Programme theory and necessary conditions 175
Cognitive, affective and normative dimensions: an imbalance 177
Fred's survival and deficit models 179
Displacement of scope and going beyond the touchline 180
Social capital: not always for the public good 182
The contingent nature of impacts: stating the obvious ... for some? 182
Hope is not a plan: a defence of scepticism 184

References 187
Index 199