

Contents

Introduction

PAGE
3

BOOK I

PART ONE: THE CONCEPTS

GENERAL ARGUMENT. The ancient gods survive during the Middle Ages by virtue of interpretations of their origin and nature propounded by antiquity itself.

I. The Historical Tradition

11

Euhemerism and Christian apologetics, p. 12. Euhemerism in the Middle Ages, p. 13. The gods as precursors of civilization, p. 14; as founders of dynasties, p. 19. Euhemerism during the Renaissance, p. 20. Ethnological legends at the Burgundian court, in France, in Italy, p. 24. The historical tradition and iconography, p. 26

II. The Physical Tradition

37

Astral divinities at the end of the pagan era, p. 37. Attitude of the Church Fathers toward astrology, p. 42. Attitude of the Middle Ages: the role of the gods in science and magic, p. 46. Astrology during the Renaissance: attitude of the humanists, p. 56. The physical tradition and iconography, p. 63. The microcosms, p. 64. The planets and their "children" in Italian monumental art from the fourteenth to the sixteenth century, p. 69. The gods of the Farnesina and the Cappella Chigi, p. 79

III. The Moral Tradition

84

Mythological allegory in antiquity, p. 84; in the hands of the Church Fathers, p. 87; in the Middle Ages, p. 89. The Ovide moralisé and its progeny, p. 91. Fulgentius metaforalis, p. 94. The Renaissance and mythological allegory, p. 95. Neoplatonism, p. 96. Hieroglyphs and emblems, p. 99. The moral tradition and iconography, p. 104. The psychomachia in art, p. 109. Symbolism in Botticelli, p. 112; in Correggio, p. 117; in Titian, p. 119

iv. The Encyclopedic Tradition

PAGE
122

Intermingling of the three cycles, historical, physical, and moral, p. 122. The gods in medieval encyclopedism, p. 123. The encyclopedic tradition and iconography, p. 125; its spread in Italian monumental art of the fourteenth century, p. 127. The gods of the Tempio Malatestiano, p. 132. The Tarocchi of Mantegna, p. 137. The Stanza della Segnatura, p. 143

PART TWO: THE FORMS

GENERAL ARGUMENT. The true role of the Italian Renaissance in relation to the mythological material transmitted by the Middle Ages lies in restoring classical form, since from late antiquity on, the manner of representing the gods has undergone every variety of change.

i. The Metamorphoses of the Gods

149

THE PICTORIAL TRADITION. Figures representing constellations, in manuscripts dating from the Alexandrian period to the fifteenth century, p. 150; Greek types, p. 151; Oriental types, p. 153. Planetary gods in Michael Scot, p. 156; on the Campanile of Giotto and in the Cappella degli Spagnuoli, p. 160. Mythology in Byzantine art, p. 163

THE LITERARY TRADITION. The gods as described by late pagan and early Christian writers and by the encyclopedists, p. 167. Representation of the gods in manuscripts: Rémi of Auxerre and John Ridewall, p. 167. The Liber ymaginum deorum of Albricus and the Libellus de deorum imaginibus, p. 170. Petrarch and Bersuire, p. 172. Sources of the gods of the Libellus, p. 175. Profound alteration of the classical types of the gods under the influence of the two traditions by the end of the Middle Ages, and its causes, p. 179

ii. The Reintegration of the Gods

184

THE PICTORIAL TRADITION. Return to the classical constellation types: Dürer's sky map, p. 185; planetary figures, p. 187

THE LITERARY TRADITION. Diffusion of the types created by Albricus, p. 189. Gradual evolution of these types toward classical form, p. 190. The Tarocchi of Mantegna, p. 199. The frescoes of Francesco Cossa in the Schifanoia Palace, p. 203. Survival of medieval types at the height of the Renaissance, p. 210. The true function of the Renaissance: the reintegration

PAGE

tion of antique subject matter in the antique forms, p. 211. The role of Italy, p. 214

BOOK II

i. The Science of Mythology in the Sixteenth Century

219

THE PRECURSORS. Boccaccio and the Genealogia deorum, p. 220; editions of the ancient and medieval mythographers, p. 225; the first sixteenth-century compilations, p. 226

THE GREAT ITALIAN MANUALS. Giraldi's History of the Gods, Conti's Mythology, and Cartari's Images of the Gods, p. 229. Sources of the manuals: return to the medieval mythographic tradition, with incorporation of contemporary nonclassical elements, p. 234; neglect of figural monuments, p. 243; perpetuation of old systems of interpretation, p. 247. Aim of the manuals: assistance to poets and artists, p. 250. Proposed models still often barbaric types, emphasizing symbolism and allegory to the detriment of plastic form, p. 252. Illustrations of the manuals never directly inspired by antiquity, p. 254

ii. Theories Regarding the Use of Mythology

257

ART CRITICISM. Armenini and Lomazzo, p. 257; critics as counselors of artists, p. 258. Insistence upon thorough knowledge of mythology, especially of the attributes of the gods, p. 260

ECCLESIASTICAL CENSORSHIP. The Council of Trent and mythology, p. 264. Attitude of Paleotto and Possevino toward representation of the gods, p. 266. The artists' defense, p. 268. Results of the controversy: ascendancy of allegory, p. 269. Mythology "moralized" by the Jesuits, p. 275. The Iconologia of Cesare Ripa, p. 278

iii. The Influence of the Manuals

279

IN ITALY. The gods in festivals and processions after 1550, p. 280; in monumental frescoes after 1550, p. 286. Vasari's Palazzo Vecchio decorations and the Ragionamenti, p. 288. Zuccaro's decorations at Caprarola and the instructions of Annibale Caro, p. 291. Zucchi's decorations in the Palazzo Ruspoli and the Discorso sopra li dei de'gentili, p. 298. The Venetians and mythological allegory: Veronese and Tintoretto, p. 303

IN EUROPE OUTSIDE OF ITALY. France: Jean Le Maire de Belges, p. 306; Ronsard, p. 307; du Bartas, p. 309; Rabelais and Montaigne, p. 311.

	PAGE
England: knowledge of mythology among the Elizabethan poets, p. 312; Shakespeare, p. 314; the masques, p. 315. Germany, p. 316. Spain, p. 317
CONCLUSION. The nature of the Renaissance, its true role, and the causes of its decline, p. 319. The fortunes of the ancient gods in seventeenth-century Europe, p. 321
 Bibliography
I. Sources	327
II. Studies	332
 Index	 346