

THE BOTTOM LINE

The Bottom Line, a club in New York's Greenwich Village, is a place I decided to visit one night in 1974. Ry Cooder, an artist who had been introduced to me by Jack Nitzsche, was playing there and I decided to go down and listen to him perform. Jack had raved about how great he was and I respected Jack's opinion a lot. He was great. At the same time, I had a bunch of new songs and seemed to be itching to play them, since I took my guitar with me to the club. I played a guest set after Ry played.

I recall very little about the Bottom Line—a famous small folk club, very crowded that night, with a little stage that I walked onto around 2 a.m. according to what I have read and vaguely remember. I had just recorded the album On the Beach in LA about a month before and had a bunch of new and even newer songs to play. This is the only recording of that night, recorded from a tabletop in the club on a cassette recorder. We took some of the extraneous noise out of the recording but in order to preserve all the music and vibe, we left quite a bit in. What you hear on this recording is what happened that night. I'm glad Simon Montgomery recorded it. -ny
