

Contents

Foreword.....	10
Preface.....	14
1. Research goals.....	17
2. Sources and methodology.....	19
3. State of knowledge.....	25
4. Cooperation and planning before the outbreak of the Second World War.....	33
4.1 Intelligence activities in Czechoslovakia before the outbreak of the war.....	33
4.2 Foundation of Section D.....	36
5. From the attack on Poland to the defeat of France.....	41
5.1 The Unreal Uprising - Autumn 1939 and the attitude of British intelligence.....	41
5.2 Spring 1940 and the planning of the operations.....	46
6. The formation of the Special Operations Executive and the Czechoslovak position.....	49
7. The origins of cooperation and activities in Czechoslovakia.....	56
7.1 Position of Czechoslovak intelligence officers in exile as viewed by British intelligence officers.....	56
7.2 Planning the first airdrops.....	60
7.3 The operations of the so-called I. wave and the impact of their activities on mutual cooperation in the light of British sources.....	63
8. Loss of SOE support or failure of cooperation?.....	77

9. The move of the base from the UK to Italy and the significance of this move for the planned activities of the Second Department of the Ministry of National Defence.....	95
10. Excursus: Escape routes in Czechoslovakia and their links to British intelligence activities.....	106
10.1 The British Secret Service MI9 and the tracks of 'escapees' in Slovakia.....	106
10.2 Opeartion Amsterdam.....	112
11. The end of the war and the SOE in post-war Czechoslovakia	117
11.1 Colonel Perkins' mission in Czechoslovakia.....	123
Conclusion.....	132
Appendixes to the publication.....	135
Appendix 1.....	135
Appendix 2.....	167
Appendix 3.....	168
Sources and Literature.....	169
Name Index.....	174