

Contents and Tables

	Acknowledgments	ix
1	Beyond palpable mass demand	1
2	Young people and leisure: identity crystallisation	31
3	Young adults: identification with social institutions	118
4	The establishment phase: life investments	186
5	Life styles for later years: personal and social integration	270
6	Leisure provision: specialist providers cannot do it all	321
7	Leisure: the individual, the family and society	352
	Index in subsequent development	352
	Bibliography	364
	Index	379
1	Games in adolescent development	382
2	Leisure in the establishment period	382
3	Hobbies reported in Ipswich national sample, 1965 (men and women, 21+)	382
4	Gambling and social class in Ipswich national sample, 1965	383
5	Watch television every night (Ipswich sample, 1965), percentages by age (men and women)	385
6	Sub-populations and stress symptoms (Ipswich survey)	385
7	Age-specific activity rates for males in older age groups (per cent) (Social Trends, 1972)	372
8	Age-specific activity rates for females, married and unmarried, in older age groups (per cent) (Social Trends, 1972)	373
9	Sub-phases of later life	380
10	Changes in emphasis of social patterns in the transition to post-industrialism (Emery and Trist, 1973)	358