

CONTENTS

ABBREVIATIONS xix

LIST OF MAPS xxi

I. THE FIRST ROMAN CONTACTS

1. THE BRITISH BACKGROUND

Britain in Roman eyes	3
Man and landscape	4
British prehistory and its interpretation	6
The Late Iron Age	10
New patterns of life already emerging	14
'The Celts'	16
Their language	17
North-western Europe, a common culture?	18

2. THE EXPEDITIONS OF CAESAR

The Roman Republic	20
Its character and decay	21
Caesar	22
His decision to invade Britain	23
The expedition of 55 BC	25
The expedition of 54 BC	31
Failure or success?	38

3. FROM CAESAR TO CLAUDIUS

Britain between the Invasions: political and cultural affinities	40
The end of the Roman Republic	48
Augustus and Britain	50
Roman attitudes to war and government	52
Stability and instability in Roman state and character	54
The changing scene in Late Pre-Roman Britain	55
Gaius' expedition	60
Its abortion	60
Its significance	61
Note: Augustus and Britain, 27 BC	61

II. THE ROMAN CONQUEST

4. THE CLAUDIAN INVASION

Romans and the acquisition of empire	65
Death of Cunobelinus; changes in Britain	67
Accession of Claudius	68
His reasons for invading Britain	69
The Roman army under the Early Empire	72
The Britons as warriors	76

Rome becomes a more formidable enemy	77
Growing power of the emperor	78
Invasion and victory	82
Claudius' part in the campaign	85
The new province	87
Client kingdoms	90
Vespasian in the west	92
The 'Fosse Way Frontier'—a tenable concept?	95
Notes: Motives for the Invasion: a geographical theory	98
Exeter, II Augusta and the transfer of legions	98
5. RESISTANCE AND REVOLT
Ostorius Scapula as governor	100
Revolt of the Iceni	101
The Deceangli: the first probe into North Wales	103
The Brigantian problem begins	103
The Roman flank in South Wales	103
Caratacus raises a new war against Rome	105
Defeat of Caratacus	106
His surrender by Cartimandua: a new British success for Claudius	106
The Silures and the death of Ostorius	106
The Brigantes again: Venutius	108
Death of Claudius: a new regime at Rome	108
Vacillation and ambiguity towards Britain	109
Suetonius Paulinus: Anglesey	110
The British aristocracy the key to peace	111
Causes of the Boudiccan revolt	113
The course of the war	116
Classicianus, Polyclitus, Suetonius, and pacification	121
Note: The recall of Suetonius Paulinus	123
6. RECOVERY AND ADVANCE
A slow recovery	124
The winning of the British aristocracy	125
Britain and the Year of the Four Emperors	127
The revolt of Venutius	132
Petillius Cerialis and Julius Frontinus	133
Agricola	138
Agricola and Romanization	141
Mons Graupius	146
Britain won and lost?	149
Nerva, Trajan, and the new regime	154
Britain at the opening of the second century	155
Note: The date of the arrival of Agricola and of the forums at
Verulamium and Cirencester	167
7. HADRIANIC BRITAIN
Hadrian and the empire	169
Hadrian in Britain	173

The question of the Ninth legion	174
The Wall	175
Civil development	185
Army and civilian: the seeds of discord	187
Town and country	188
The Fenland	189
Note: Hadrian's Wall and Offa's Dyke	190
8. THE ANTONINES
Antoninus Pius and the legacy of Hadrian	192
The invasion of Scotland	193
The Antonine Wall	194
The 'Genounian' incident	199
The Antonine Wall evacuated	200
Alternative chronologies	201
Marcus Aurelius	203
Second occupation of the Antonine Wall and its end	205
The Danubian wars: barbarian pressure becomes serious	207
Defeat and recovery in Britain: Ulpius Marcellus	210
Britain and the army under Commodus	211
Assassination of Commodus: Pertinax proclaimed	214
III. IMPERIAL CRISIS AND RECOVERY
9. CIVIL WAR AND ITS AFTERMATH
The struggle for the throne	217
Clodius Albinus and the events of 197	217
Retribution and restoration in Britain	222
The expedition and death of Severus	227
The uneasy accession of Caracalla and Geta	230
Caracallan policy in Britain	231
Britain by AD 200: a retrospect	231
'Town and country', 'Roman and native', and other problems of social definition	234
10. FROM CARACALLA TO DIOCLETIAN
Romans and barbarians	239
Caracallan policy in Britain assessed	241
Problems of the historian	243
Restoration and change in northern Britain	245
The governors of the two provinces	249
Military developments in the south	253
Town walls and their interpretation	261
The condition of the towns	264
Imperial disorder	269
The empire assailed from east and west	270
The role of the army	271
The 'Imperium Galliarum'	273
Britain after the fall of the Gallic Empire	277

11. THE TETRARCHY
AD 284—the end of Ancient History?	285
Diocletian, Maximian, and Carausius	286
The Tetrarchy	290
Diocletian and change	290
The Carausian regime	295
The Saxon Shore	299
Constantius I as Caesar	301
Allectus replaces Carausius	305
Constantius' conquest of Britain	306
A barbarian invasion in 296?	312
Britain in the imperial system under Diocletian and after	315
Constantius becomes Augustus	318
His British campaign of 306 and the Picts	318
Notes: Comitatus	319
The Saxon Shore	320
12. CONSTANTINE THE GREAT
The elevation of Constantine at York	322
Dating the restoration of the north	324
Prosperity in town and country	328
Constantine and the reorganization of the army	330
Comitatenses and limitanei	333
The Notitia Dignitatum	336
The organizational consequences of Diocletian's economic reforms	336
The fourth-century provincial governor	337
A transfer of wealth and power to the Church	339
Creed as a new dimension in Roman politics	340
Office-holders in fourth-century Britain	345
13. THE MIDDLE OF THE FOURTH CENTURY
Death of Constantine and its consequences	348
Fragmentation of army and administration	349
Constans in Britain	349
The praetorian prefecture of Gaul	353
Magnentius	354
The recovery of Britain and its aftermath	356
Julian and Britain	359
Changes at Constantinople and their significance	364
Further developments in the army	366
Prolonged adversity and the state of morale in Britain	367
The towns	371
Note: Julian and his senior officers	373
14. THE RESTORATION OF ORDER
Valentinian I	374
The German element in the Late Roman state	374
The 'barbarian conspiracy' of 367	375
The expedition of the elder Theodosius	380

The reconstruction	382
'German mercenaries' in Britain?	386
City defences and city garrisons	388
The problem of 'Valentia'	391
Late fourth-century Britain	397
Theodosius the Great	400
Magnus Maximus	401
The foederati	406
A new pattern of frontier defence?	406
Arbogast and Eugenius	408
The empire reunited	409
Death of Theodosius	409
Notes: Military uniform and civilians	410
Foederati	410
The province of Valentia	411
Maximus and heresy	411
The towns in the second half of the fourth century	411
Late frontier defence	412
IV. ROMAN BRITAIN AND THE FIFTH CENTURY WORLD
15. THE COLLAPSE OF IMPERIAL RULE
Arcadius and Honorius	415
Shift of power in the Roman state	416
Increased importance of the barbarian allies	417
Diplomacy and war	417
Stilicho and Britain	419
The barbarians cross the Rhine: irreversible consequences	426
Britain revolts from Honorius	426
Constantine III	427
Barbarian attack on Britain	433
Expulsion of Constantine's officers from Britain	434
The end of Roman rule in Britain	434
Disintegration of the regular army?	437
Administration in Britain after 409	441
The 'Rescript of Honorius'	442
Note: Britain, AD 406-10	444
16. BRITAIN, THE END OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE, AND THE SUCCESSOR STATES
A revival in the fortunes of the imperial government	446
The partition of Gaul	447
Survival of the provincial aristocracy	449
Britain after the break with Rome	453
Economic change and the nature of 'prosperity'	454
Stratigraphy and the towns	457
The countryside	460
Power, society, and politics	461
The first visit of St. Germanus	462

Vortigern	467
The 'Adventus Saxonum'	471
Career of Aetius: implications for Britain	474
Second visit of St. Germanus	479
The latter part of the fifth century	483
The crisis in the west	483
The struggle in Britain	484
King Arthur?	485
The end of the empire in the west	485
Dissolution of the western Roman army	485
Britain and Gaul	491
Their condition around AD 500	498
Notes: Sources for fifth-century Britain	501
Vortigern and the 'Concilium Britanniarum'
V. BRITAIN UNDER ROMAN RULE
17. THE ASSIMILATION OF BRITAIN
The instruments of Romanization	505
Race, class, and culture	505
Latin	506
The army	508
Immigration	513
Temporary residents	514
Religion	515
The machinery of government	516
The changing centre of power	516
Patronage and the importance of access	517
The governor and his staff	519
The limits of authority	523
Administration of justice	525
The command of the army	527
Finance	530
The provincial council	532
Local government: rationale and practice	534
Notes: The municipal aristocracy	537
Chesterholm (Vindolanda)	537
18. THE HISTORICAL GEOGRAPHY OF ROMAN BRITAIN
Ancient and modern approaches	539
Population	542
Numbers	542
Health and mortality	549
Landscape	553
Density of Iron Age occupation	554
Man and environment in the Roman period	555
Post-Roman Britain	559
Communications	562
A conflict of opinion	562
Water and road transport compared	563

Travellers: official, private, and the Imperial Post	565
Messages and signals	570
Britain a special case	571
Note: Palaeobotany and the ancient environment	571
19. TOWN AND COUNTRY
Urbanization in Britain, an artificial imposition by Rome?	573
Cities and their regions	573
Significance of the 'city' in the ancient world	573
The civic unit	574
The ordo and magistrates	575
Finance	576
Public services	578
Variations in urban development	580
Towns, agriculture, and the immediate hinterland	586
Rural patterns	588
Types of settlement in the countryside	588
'Town' and 'country' discrete?	589
The small towns of Roman Britain	592
Villas, farms, and the organization of the land	596
Villa and village?	610
Rural settlement on the northern frontier	611
Note: The Roman villa	614
20. THE ECONOMY
Economics and the ancient world	615
Agriculture	618
Manufacturing and extractive industries	629
Fuel and power	631
Mining	632
The iron industry	637
Pottery	641
Three examples of commerce and industry	651
The wine trade	651
Textiles	655
Mosaics	656
Small businesses	657
Money and coinage	659
The economic significance of the end of Roman rule	661
Note: Ancient crop yields	663
21. RELIGION AND SOCIETY
Religion and its place in society	665
'Conflation'	665
A classification of cults	666
Native British	666
Classical	666
Imported non-Roman	666
Interpretation of the archaeology and its limits	668

Celtic and Roman religion	669
Sanctuaries	670
The concept of priesthood	676
Druids	677
The severed head	681
Traditional Roman religion	681
The Imperial Cult and related public worship	682
Personal religion	683
Healing cults	686
Curses and magic	688
Rural shrines and their contents	690
Death and burial	693
Lares, penates , and other family cults	707
Philosophy and the mystery religions	709
Mithraism	711
Christianity and the nature of the Church in Britain	714
Survival of paganism	735
Collapse of the Romano-British Church?	738
Note: Religion in Roman Britain: addenda	739
APPENDICES
I. A note on Roman names	740
II. Roman emperors from Augustus to Justinian	742
III. Governors of the British provinces	746
IV. Tiberius Claudius Cogidubnus?	748
BIBLIOGRAPHY	753
INDEX	777