

CONTENTS

Introduction: On the scientific study of language
1. Currents of linguistic research	9
2. Plan of the present analysis	13
3. Encoding	15
A. Functional onomatology
I. The meaning of the naming unit
1. The essence and character of the naming unit	17
2. Components of the naming unit	18
II. The form of the naming unit
1. Simple and descriptive naming units	23
2. The word. General considerations	24
3. Non-compound words	25
4. Compound words	28
a) Definition of compound words	28
b) Types of compounds	29
c) Features of collocations	32
d) Verbal compounds and collocations in English	33
5. Shortening of words and coining of new naming units	34
III. Classification of naming units
1. The problem of the parts of speech (word categories)	38
2. Formal differences between the word categories in English	39
3. The relation between substantives and adjectives in English	40
4. The relation between nouns and verbs in English	42
5. The relation between adjectives and adverbs in English	43
IV. Classification within the word categories
1. Formal classification, aspectual modifications and categorial transitions	45
2. Formal classification and aspectual modifications of nouns	46
a) Gender of nouns	46
b) Aspectual modification of grammatical number	48
c) Aspectual modification of definiteness (Uses of the articles)	52

3. Categorical transitions of nouns	54
4. Formal classification and aspectual modifications of adjectives	55
5. Categorical transitions of adjectives	57
6. Formal categories and aspectual modifications of verbs . .	58
a) Formal categories of the verb	59
b) Aspectual modifications of the verb	60
α) General survey	60
β) Tense	63
γ) Remarks on the problems of tense in English	65
δ) Verbal aspect	68
ϵ) Mood	73
7. Categorical transitions of the verb in English	74
a) The relation of the action to the subject	74
b) The relation of the action to the object	76
α) Subjective and objective verbs	76
β) Reflexive verbs	77
 B. Functional syntax
I. Definition of the sentence	79
II. Functional sentence analysis
1. The basis and the nucleus of a statement	81
2. One-element and two-element sentences from the point of view of functional sentence perspective	82
3. Functional and formal analysis of the sentence	84
III. Formal analysis of simple sentences
1. General remarks	86
2. One-element verblessthetic sentences	87
3. One-element verbless predicative sentences	88
4. Two-element verbless sentences	89
5. Apposition	90
6. Absolute construction	94
7. Verbal sentences	96
a) General remarks	96
b) Grammatical person	99
8. The function of the subject in English	100
9. Predication in English	104
a) Actional predication from the formal point of view . . .	104
b) Actional predication from the semantic point of view: active predication	106
c) Types of passive actional predication	107
d) Qualifying predication	114

e) Other types of predication	118
10. The object in English	120
a) General remarks	120
b) Object of the accusative type.	122
c) Object of the dative type	126
d) Object of the genitive type	128
e) Other types of object	128
11. The attribute in English	133
a) Adjectival attribute	133
b) Substantival attribute	136
12. Adverbials in English	140
a) General remarks	140
b) Expression of adverbials in English	141
IV. The English sentence as a whole
1. Means of complex condensation	146
a) General remarks	146
b) English participles	148
c) The infinitive and the gerund in English	150
d) Complex constructions.	152
2. The word order of the English sentence	153
a) Principles determining the order of words in a language	153
b) Other problems of English word order	160
3. Strengthening and emphasis	163
4. Notes on negation	165
V. Notes on other problems of functional syntax
1. Compound and complex sentences	171
2. The uses of moods and tenses	172
Notes	175
Bibliography	191
Editor's postscript to the original Czech edition (1961)	203
Postscript to the English translation (1973)	207
Index of persons	208
Index of subjects	211
Index of words.	220