

CONTENTS

| | |
|---|----|
| Abstract | 5 |
| Introduction | 6 |
| 1. Women in labor under totalitarianism | 7 |
| 1.1. Socialist ideology—in theory and in practice | 7 |
| 1.2. Labor force participation rates | 8 |
| 1.3. Occupational segmentation and the labor market | 9 |
| 1.4. Wages and the wage gap | 10 |
| 1.5. Social policy | 13 |
| 1.6. Discrimination | 13 |
| 1.7. Attitudes about work and family | 13 |
| 2. The revolution and ensuing changes for women in the labor market | 15 |
| 2.1. Post 1989 events | 15 |
| 2.2. Labor force participation rates | 16 |
| 2.3. Occupational segmentation | 17 |
| 2.4. Wages and the wage gap | 19 |
| 2.5. Social policy | 20 |
| 2.6. Discrimination and relevant labor laws | 21 |
| 2.7. Attitudes on family and work | 23 |
| 2.7.1. Public opinion on general and specific changes since the revolution | 23 |
| 2.7.2. Private sector opportunities | 25 |
| 2.7.3. Current attitudes about work | 26 |
| 2.7.4. Changes in the nature of the “double burden” | 28 |
| 2.7.5. How men and women view themselves in society | 29 |
| Conclusion | 31 |
| 3. Interviewees | 32 |
| Appendix | 41 |
| Bibliography | 43 |